The public library on Fifth avenue is a great refuge in cold weather for those unfortunates who have no place else to get warm. They go in, ask for a book and sit at a table in the reading room until the place closes at 10 p. m. They are not obliged to read. As long as they stay awake, nobody disturbs them until closing hour. Some of them try to stow away in the library for the night, but an inspection is made and they always are discovered. Few persons appear to know that the library has a restaurant for its employees and other conveniences, which make it almost a little village in itself.

Mercolized Wax Keeps Skin Young

Get an ounce and use as directed. Fine particles of aged skin seal off and all defects such as pimples, liver spots, tan and freckles disappear. Skin is then soft and velvety. Your face looks years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty of your skin. To remove wrinkles use one ounce. Overdosed. Available in one-half pint which lasts. At drug stores.

Gaelic Sign Too Attractive

Merchants of Dingwall, Scotland, decided that during the annual Mod week last year they would make a hit with visitors by having all signs over their stores in Gaelic. One non-Gaelic business man got a neighbor to write an advertisement of the excellent quality of his wares. When a crowd stormed the place the merchant learned that his sign advertised that any customer coming into the store at a certain time would get "three free drinks." And down came the sign in record time.

OCEAN VETERAN STARTING ON HER LAST VOYAGE

In a spectacular blaze, discovered while she was moored to her Seattle pier, the Alaska steamship Alameda was destroyed by fire. The ship, which had cut the waters between Alaska and Seattle since 1908, was valued at $800,000. When it was found that the blaze could not be controlled the ship was towed into the stream and consigned to a watery grave.

How It Started By Jean Newton

Why Do We Call Them "Currant" and "Curacao"? "WHY," inquires a reader, "do we call the small dried grape a currant?"

Another reader inquires as to the origin of the liqueur known as curacao. It gives the writer great pleasure to kill both of these etymological birds with one stick, as it were.

We have "currant" from the French "raisins de Couraunt," meaning literally "grapes from Corinth" in Greece; from where, of course, they are exported all over the world.

We have "curacao" which, as has been stated, is a liqueur, because of the fact that it originated in the island of Curacao.

Russian Lady, 107, Says We Are Dumb and Stupid

Columbus, Ohio.—Mrs. Marie Charlotte de Goller Davenport, born in Russia 107 years ago and educated in Vienna university and the Sorbonne, claims a number of prerogatives for her years, including frank criticism of her hosts.

She indulged the right without restraint on a recent visit to Columbus. She said:

"Your people are stupid and unfriendly and impolite. Each time I return here I find your people more dumb."

"They don't produce anything; they jog along like so many jackasses."

"I see no progress here; the people want no intelligence."

"All of the great stimulus that is the human soul is gone out of your people."

"I speak freely; I have seen so much."

But of the American people, in general, Mrs. Davenport said:

"You are darlings and I love you all."

Conference.

Bruce L. Melvin, research secretary of the committee on Farm and Village Housing, of the President's conference on home building and ownership, will tell National Farm and Home Hour listeners what aids to planning farm and city houses can be had from the committee, when he speaks in the United States Department of Agriculture period of the Farm and Home Hour.

The Farmers' Educational and Co-operative Union monthly broadcast will be heard in the National Farm Home Hour on Wednesday, January 20, and will feature a prominent speaker on agricultural subjects.

Another episode in the experiences of the United States Forest Rangers will be given on Thursday, January 21. This series, inaugurated this month, is designed to arouse greater interest in forest fire prevention and protection.

Many Government
Speakers on Air

Five hundred and fifteen broadcasting hours were utilized by the United States government over the networks of the National Broadcasting company during 1931. M. H. Aylesworth, president of the company, reports.

The United States Department of Agriculture made the greatest use of radio during the year. Exactly 254 officials of this department gave 581 talks before the microphone. Most of these talks were broadcast in the National Farm and Home Hour, broadcast each week day at 11:30 a. m. to 12:30 p. m., central standard time.

President Hoover, Mr. Aylesworth's report shows, spoke 29 times, which is the greatest number of times any President has been heard over the radio in one year; Vice President Curtis made three radio speeches; the chief justice, Charles Evans Hughes, spoke five times.

Every member of the cabinet faced the microphone at least once during the year.

Thirty-two members of the senate made 52 radio addresses, and members of the house spoke 25 times. America's three service bands were heard in 241 contests, many of which were in the National Farm and Home Hour. The Army band broadcast 108 times, the Marine band 71 times, and the Navy band 67 times.

Numerous officials of foreign governments also spoke over the networks.

Since his inauguration President Hoover has made 96 radio addresses. In his seven years as President, Calvin Coolidge spoke only 37 times over the radio. Many of President Hoover's addresses were made directly from the White House.

All known records for a continuous broadcast were broken recently when Gene and Glenn were on the air from WTAM in Cleveland for more than seven hours in the interest of the Cleveland Christmas fund program.

An admirer of Lowell Thomas, sent him a letter for his autobiography, "Hope this will keep you from catching cold," read an accompanying note. Next day he got a dozen handkerchiefs—"in case he did."

Elaine Paisley, style expert of Women's Radio Review, mentioned in a talk a new style knitted bere that could be made at home, and received three thousand requests for directions.

"I've gone ping-pong mad!" says Odette Myrtle, orchestra leader, mistress of ceremonies, and violin and vocal soloist of the Gayettes orchestra program. She has turned the cellar of her Douglass (L. I.) home into a game room and installed a doubles tournament table, where a championship match is in full swing—Douglass vs. Front Neck.

Trends in dairy production is being reviewed in the National Farm and Home Hour by J. B. Shepard, economist in the United States Department of Agriculture.

In MANCHURIA

Loading Manchurian Flour Aboard a Sungari River Boat.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)—Wash. Service.

THIS three principal focal points of the Sino-Japanese disturbance in Manchuria—Taitshar, Anganchi, and Chinchowfu—Taitshar is, perhaps, the most widely known because it has been a stopping place and press box for world-gazers in recent years.

Taitshar is the capital of Heilung Kiang, largest of the three provinces of Manchuria, and the principal city in a vast, only partially-developed area of rich farming and grazing land. Military activity is no new sensation to the 35,000 inhabitants of this brown-walled city in the fertile valley of the Nonni river. Taitshar was built in 1902 to oversee marauding tribes of Mongols and Cossacks.

Later China sent many bandits into exile in Manchuria. The medley of native population groups in the vicinity of Taitshar forced the construction of huge barracks there and the details of military units to the town, so that it has long had the aspect of a fortress. Like every other important Manchurian city Taitshar owes its present wealth and activity to railroads. When the Chinese Eastern railway was built as a short cut between Chita and Vladivostok, Taitshar was a slowly growing settlement of ramshackle buildings back of its crenelated walls. Builders of the Chinese Eastern missed the town by laying the line 18 miles to the south. Later, however, a narrow-gauge spur was built, connecting with the Chinese Eastern at Taitshar station.

Taitshar came into the recent "misunderstanding," however, through a new and extremely busy railroad line, constructed during the last decade northward from Taonanfu, through Anganchi, and crossing over the Chinese Eastern main line on a bridge at Taitshar station, the junction point of the narrow gauge line. This new line is Chinese-operated and Japanese-owned from Taonanfu to Anganchi, and entirely Chinese owned and operated from Anganchi to the city of Taitshar.

The new line does not end at Taitshar but continues in a northeast direction for 70 miles to Talanchen. Eventually it will reach the Siberian border and will connect with a branch of the Trans-Siberian railway at Biagovschensk.

Town With Modern Improvements. Few travelers visited isolated Taitshar before the railroad came. For a time those who did passed by coffins strewn outside the town walls—coffins of natives whose families were unable to pay burial expenses. Inside the walls the travelers saw a dingy paved and unlighted street.

Railroads have changed all that. Today Taitshar is a busy town, greatly changed and improved by modern development. While it is neither as large nor as modernized as the other two Manchurian provincial capitals, Mukden and Kirin, Taitshar has several wide, paved streets, electric lights, telegraph and telephone services. Tile-roofed houses, with coats of bright paint, are rising where old shacks once stood.

Since the new north-south railroad has been added to the spur from the Chinese Eastern railway, Taitshar is on the way to becoming one of the chief industrial centers of Manchuria. Mills are grinding out meal as fast as soy beans can be brought from Manchurian fields. Its shops and stores throng with customers, and its railroad yards are scenes of constant movements of trains. The new line to Talanchen, broke all records for traffic in Manchuria early this year.

Manchus, Mongols, Koreans, Russians, Yakuts, Chinese, Japanese and a few Europeans may be seen on the streets of the city, which is fast assuming the cosmopolitan air of other Chinese trading towns. During the horse and cattle fairs Mongol cattle traders flock to Taitshar, nearly doubling the population.

Manchurian horses come mostly from the grass-covered plains in the vicinity of Taitshar. The region is the native home of the pony which helped to build up the near-world empire of the great Kublai Khan. Shaggy and stubborn, the Taitshar mount has endurance and is dependable on long marches over cold, irregular terrain. Heilung Kiang province leads in the production of barley in Manchuria; is second in soy beans and wheat. Of its 20,500,000 cultivable acres only a third have so far been put into use.

While Taitshar is in about the same latitude as Seattle, Wash., it suffers from extremes of heat and cold. In summer the thermometer rises above 95 degrees for days at a time, and in winter it nose-dives to 40 degrees below zero. Nevertheless the region around Taitshar contains some of the richest soil in the world, and is capable of a good deal of future development. In the Nonni river Taitshar has a stream capable of carrying a considerable amount of water trade in junks and barges during the summer months.

The little village of Anganchi, captured by Japanese forces in the drive on Taitshar, possesses an importance far out of proportion to its limited population because it stands near a kind of "spark gap," supercharged with the economic ambitions and railway interest of Japan, China and Russia in northwestern Manchuria.

Why Anganchi is Important. Anganchi is two miles south of Taitshar station. It is the northernmost station on the new Chinese-operated, Japanese-built railway line from Taonanfu.

Anganchi was practically unheard of until the new line, pushing up from Taonanfu during the last decade, built its terminal in the town.

In a land which has constructed more miles of railway in recent years than any other part of the world, and which, in some places, laid new lines at the rate of a mile a day, it may seem strange that the two-mile gap between Anganchi and Taitshar station was not closed for many months.

Treaty rights, dating from the close of the Russo-Japanese war, were involved. The Taonanfu-Anganchi railway was built with funds loaned to the Chinese by a syndicate of Japanese banks, who in turn gave the construction contract to the South Manchurian Railway company.

When the line reached Anganchi the Chinese Eastern railway, jointly controlled by Soviet Russia and China, objected to the crossing of its main line by a railroad linked with the South Manchurian railway (Japanese) interests. Consequently, when the line was finally continued to Taitshar station, to Taitshar itself and to the city of Talanchen beyond, only Chinese capital was employed.

Aside from the yards and station of the railroad line, Anganchi possesses little to distinguish it from hundreds of other mud-walled villages in the wind-swept farming and grazing lands of the Nonni river basin. The inhabitants, several hundred in number, are mainly Russians, although the influx of Chinese has been noticeable since the completion of the railway lines to the north and south of it.

Chinchowfu a Shipping Center. Chinchowfu is the chief city on the Manchurian peninsula that penetrates China on the west coast of the Gulf of Chihli. It is the first important Manchurian city beyond Shanhaikwan, where the Great Wall of China comes down to the sea. North and west of Chinchowfu rise the mountains and desert plateaus of Inner Mongolia. South of the city stretch the tidal flats of a branch of the Gulf of Chihli, the Gulf of Liaotung. Anyone passing along the narrow coastal plain, therefore, would have to deal with walled Chinchowfu, astride the middle of it.

Chinchowfu itself is a metropolis of about 80,000 population. Much of its newer part spreads beyond the ancient, walled city, especially northward in the vicinity of the railroad terminal. As Chinchowfu is also a junction point for a branch line into Inner Mongolia its extensive rail yard includes locomotive sheds, railway division headquarters, a hospital and storage warehouses. Between the station and the walled city are big military barracks. The provincial government office is temporarily located in the University of Communications, north of the tracks.

In addition to its importance as a railway and military center Chinchowfu also is a shipping point for the greatest fruit and cotton raising region of Manchuria—the nearby Liao river valley. Shallow draft boats may ascend a tidal river to its wharves to receive fruit brought by train and carts, but most of its water-borne commerce is carried on through the new harbor at Hulutao, with which Chinchowfu is connected by a spur railway line.

THE DAIRY

TO GET INCREASED
INCOME FROM DAIRYMiniature Farm Laboratory
Great Help.

Prying into the secrets of milk yields with the help of miniature cow-testing laboratories may result in an increased dairy income, according to S. M. Salisbury, professor of animal husbandry at the Ohio State university, who believes that with the help of production and cost records obtained in this way it is possible to secure the maximum income from the herd.

Herd improvement associations, he says, enable the dairymen to discover weaker cows, not paying for their board, increase his income by feeding individual cows according to their production records, and to improve his herd by proving sires through the production records of their daughters.

It is good to know that these cows are producing a large and profitable flow, but the real proof of the ability of a sire is obtained by comparing the production of his daughters with that of the dams from which they came. It is possible that a sire might have good producing daughters, yet they may be lower in production than their dams. The continued use of this sire would lower the production of the herd. It is as well to find the bull that lowers production as it is to discover the one that is capable of increasing it.

If a dairymen has a herd of cows capable of making 300 pounds of fat per year, he has a fair chance of selecting a sire that will increase the production of his herd. Bulls have been able, on the average, Salisbury points out, to increase the production of daughters over dams until 301 pounds of fat is reached. After this point it is increasingly difficult to find a sire that will increase fat production. However, if the dairymen has never kept records on his herd he is in no position to know whether his herd sire has boosted or lowered the producing ability of his cows.

Time to Give Thought to the Summer Feeding

Care and feeding of cows during the summer months has a direct bearing on the next winter's production. This is shown by the experience of a Johnson county (Iowa) herd improvement association member.

He did not feed grain to cows on pasture in the summer of 1929. Then when he took the cows off pasture and started winter feeding, he noticed they were run down in flesh and that their milk production did not come up to what it should. The cows utilized the grain to build up their bodies. Last summer the owner fed grain mixture according to production through the pasture season. The ration consisted of 500 pounds of corn and cobmeal, 500 pounds of ground oats, and 100 pounds of high protein concentrate. His cows were in good condition when they came into the winter feed lots and were able to increase production and give normal response to winter feeding and care. —Successful Farming.

Management Counts

That the dairymen himself is the most important "animal" on the dairy farm, is strikingly shown by a study of the cost of producing butterfat, carried on by the Minnesota Agricultural Experiment station and the United States Department of Agriculture in Pine county, Minnesota. About 25 herds were included in the study, which extended over a three-year period, making 77 herd-year records.

Results of this survey are shown in Minnesota Bulletin 270. To study the effect of management, the dairymen were divided into four groups. Those rated "good" secured 17 per cent more fat from the same feed than did those rated "fair," whereas the group rated "poor" obtained only 70 per cent as much fat from the same feed as did the "good" group. Differences in quality of management accounted for more differences in production than did all other factors combined.

Dairy Notes

Leaving machinery standing outdoors increases farm expenses and cuts down profits.

In October, 557 cows were culled and sold in 25 New York state dairy herd improvement associations.

Giving your dairy barn a good system of ventilation means healthier stock and purer milk in the winter.

In a year or two many farmers will be kicking themselves because they did not buy dairy cows when they were cheap.

A New Hampshire dairymen, recently built a 16 by 48 safety bull pen, including breeding rack, for a cash cost of about $12.

Every dairymen should be sure that his herd sire has better breeding than the cows in the herd. In no other practical way can herd producing capacity be increased.

A Cold

Colds are common because people are careless. Prompt use of aspirin will always check a cold. Or relieve your cold at any stage. And genuine aspirin can't hurt you. Take two tablets of Bayer Aspirin at the first indication of a cold, and that's usually the end of it. If every symptom hasn't disappeared in a few hours, repeat. Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart. Take enough to give complete relief. And if your throat is sore, dissolve three tablets in water and gargle away all soreness. In every package of genuine Bayer Aspirin are proven directions for colds, headaches, sore throat, neuralgia, neuritis. Millions who used to suffer from these things have found winter comfort in aspirin.

Mountains of Mystery

South America has a moaning mountain. At certain seasons a deep note comes from Mt. El Bromado in the Chilean Andes. Another curious mountain exists in Nevada, in the United States. It gives out a note resembling at first the jingling of bells, and ending with a deep organ-like swell. In both cases the sounds are due to a peculiar formation of the earth, which under certain conditions of weather allows the separate particles to rub against each other and so produce uncanny effects. Eliza Island, off the Scottish coast, has its "singing sands." In England there is a mountain which howls. This is Cross Fell in Westmorland, where local conditions produce a gale and an awe-inspiring scream that at times can be heard for miles.

SPENCERVILLE

The revival meeting at the M. E. Church closed Sunday evening. The Home Bureau met Tuesday afternoon with Mrs. Clyde Hart, east of town.

Mark Tyndall and daughter returned home Saturday after visiting at Winchester, Minn.

Mrs. Mary Chaney and Mrs. Louie Beam were recent guests of Mr. and Mrs. DeLos White at Auburn.

The Ladies Aid of the Lutheran Church will meet on Thursday afternoon with Mrs. Luella Smith south of town.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Steward and son, William were Sunday guests at the Arthur Steward home in Garrett.

Fred Glawe returned to his work at the Auburn Auto Co., after being at home several days caused by sickness.

Mr. and Mrs. Harry Hursh and Mrs. F. B. Leighty of St. Joe called on Mr. and Mrs. Fred High Sunday evening.

Mrs. Ethel Bowser will entertain the Cheerful Workers class of the M. E. Sunday School at her home Thursday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Hahn and daughters, Clarice and Esther spent Sunday with Mrs. Hahn's parents, Mr. and Mrs. S. Stiver of Scipio.

The Misses Esther Hahn and Florence Steward attended the mix-up party and dance given by the colleges of Fort Wayne at the Y. M. C. A. Friday evening. They were guests of the Indiana Tech.

Mrs. Dora Wilder, Mrs. Marjorie Rezor and Mrs. Victoria Means returned home Friday after spending several days at Purdue attending the Short Course.

Mr. and Mrs. R. U. Bowser and Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Reed were called to Richmond, Ind., on Sunday by the death of the former's cousin, Mrs. Edgar Dennis.

The Young Ladies Social club met Friday night at the home of Mrs. LeAnna Steward. Prizes were won by Mrs. Troas Carpenter, Mrs. Cleo Reed, Miss Minnie Walker and Mrs. Gayton Tustison.

Miss Elizabeth Hart, Miss Ida Reed and Mrs. Winnie Shook were guests of the Eastern Star lodge at Fort Wayne Tuesday afternoon of last week, when special work was put on. At 8 o'clock a banquet was served and at 8 o'clock installation of officers took place. The ladies enjoyed the day very much.

FIRES THE RESULT OF DEPRESSION

The annual report of the Arson Division of the State Fire Marshal Department has been issued by Alfred Hogston, State Fire Marshal. The report covers the calendar year 1931.

390 fires of suspicious origin have been investigated during that period, an average of 32 cases each month. 16 old cases were re-opened for further investigation, as new and incriminating evidence came to light. 14 cases concerned automobiles, which is 6 less than last year.

35 cases of arson guilt were obtained and 65 arrests made, the majority on grand jury indictments. The greater part of these cases are yet pending so there have been but 20 convictions to date for the year.

"At a time like this, with widespread business depression, high taxes and unemployment, the temptation to get rid of unproductive property is very strong," Mr. Hogston stated. "In many of the above cases the property in question has been glaringly over-insured. There is no doubt that incendiarism is on the increase, the object being to 'sell the property to the insurance companies'."

Mild winter weather often tempts the use of permanent pastures but the sharp hoofs often cut through the turf and loosen or even destroy the grass. Also, winter grazing reduces the amount of pasture for the coming season by lowering the vitality and plant food reserves.

It takes nearly three times as long to fell, buck up, skid, load and saw up 1,000 board feet in logs eight inches in diameter as in 20 inch logs. This is one reason why it is less profitable to cut and convert into lumber small trees.

An Indiana apple is the ideal recess lunch.

THE ST. JOE NEWS, ST. JOE, INDIANA.

Oklahoma Girl Strong as Boy

"Louise Alice was: fretful, nervous and all run-down from whooping cough," says Mrs. F. J. Kolar, 1700 West 22nd St., Oklahoma City, Okla. "The little I could force her to eat wouldn't ever digest. She became underweight, sallow and weak."

"Then I decided to try California Fig Syrup, and the results surprised me. Her bowels started working immediately, and in little or no time she was eating so she got to be a peat at the table, always asking us to pass things. Her weight increased, her color improved and she began to romp and play again like other children. Now she's the picture of health, and strong as a boy."

Pleasant-tasting, purely vegetable California Fig Syrup acts surely and quickly to cleanse your child's stomach and bowels of the souring waste that is keeping her half-sick, bilious, sallow, feverish, listless, weak and puny. But it's more than a laxative. It tones and strengthens the stomach and bowels so these organs continue to act normally, of their own accord.

Over four million bottles used a year shows its popularity. Ask for it by the full name, "California Fig Syrup," so you'll get the genuine, endorsed by physicians for 50 years.

Cashew Not a Nut

Comparatively unknown a few years ago, the cashew nut now rivals the walnut and pecan in popularity and may be bought in almost any drug or grocery store. Last year this country consumed more than 5,000,000 pounds of cashews. The cashew "nut" is not really a nut, says T. Ralph Robinson, of the United States Department of Agriculture, but the seed of a fleshy fruit borne in clusters on a large evergreen tropical tree. Curiously, the seed is attached to the outside, at the lower end of the fruit. The cashew tree thrives in Porto Rico and other West Indian islands, and a few trees have fruited in Florida.

COLDS

RUB Muterole well into your chest and throat—almost instantly you feel easier. Repeat the Muterole-rub once an hour for five hours...

Those good old-fashioned cold remedies—oil of mustard, menthol, camphor—are mixed with other valuable ingredients in Muterole to make it what doctors call a "counter-irritant" because it gets action and is not just a salve. It penetrates and stimulates blood circulation and helps to draw out infection and pain. Used by millions for 20 years. Recommended by many doctors and nurses. All druggists.

To Mothers—Muterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Muterole.

INDIGESTION, GAS, WEAK STOMACH

Aurora, Ill.—"I was completely run-down in health, suffered from indigestion and weak stomach; my food would sour and come up, I could not sleep at night owing to too much gas in my stomach. I got so weak and run-down I could scarcely go. I doctored but got no relief to speak of," said Mrs. Gertrude Linden of 621 Ogden Ave. "Finally I decided to try Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and it relieved me of my weak stomach and indigestion and made me well and strong." How to Feed Wheat to Hogs Profitably*Experiments Prove Soaking Does Not Pay.

At the Oklahoma experiment station ten pigs were put in each of four lots and fed for a period of 90 days. All four lots were fed the same ration, consisting of wheat, tankage, and bone-meal, the varying factor in each case being the method by which the wheat was prepared for feeding. The proportion of wheat to tankage was twelve parts to one by weight.

The pigs fed whole dry wheat gained an average of 1.80 pounds per day, cost $4.50 per 100 pounds of gain, and made the wheat fed worth 91 cents a bushel. Sixty cents was the price paid for the wheat. A lot of the pigs fed whole wheat which had been soaked for 24 hours gained 1.9 pounds per day, cost $3.17 per 100 pounds, and made the wheat worth 70 cents a bushel.

The third lot was fed ground wheat. These pigs were hand fed. Their rate of gain was 1.91 pounds per day, their cost per 100 pounds of gain $4.57, and the value they put to the wheat was 80 cents a bushel. Still another lot got ground wheat by means of a self-feeder. Their average daily gain was 1.67 pounds, their cost of raising 100 pounds was $4.93, and the value of the wheat was 84 cents a bushel. The only explanation offered for the fact that soaking wheat does not pay is that possibly pigs make little or no attempt to masticate soft wheat.—Successful Farming.

How Sweet Clover Does Triple Duty on Farm

Sweet clover is a triple duty crop. Harry Freshour, Ixham county, Mich., says. It supplies hay, pasture and soil fertility. Mr. Freshour sowed a 17-acre field of sweet clover in the spring of 1928. The next year he cut it for hay early, then turned live stock on it. The field supplied more pasture than the stock possibly could consume. The clover grew rank and tall and produced a heavy crop of seed.

The following year the field was plowed down for corn. The horses had run on it all winter and there was plenty of vegetation for the plow to turn under. Oats followed the corn. Before the oats were two inches high Mr. Freshour noticed a thick stand of sweet clover coming up on the field. It was as good as he wanted, so he left it for hay and pasture the summer of 1930. This was a dry season, but the sweet clover did better than any other crop on the farm, and Mr. Freshour says he believes when it is plowed under again for oats he will have another good stand of sweet clover.—Capper's Farmer.

Standardized Milk

The problem of standardizing milk for the production of Cheddar cheese is the subject of Research Bulletin 108, recently issued by the Wisconsin Agricultural experiment station. Following a brief review of the history of standardization of milk for cheese making and of several experimental trials, Professors Price and Germain recite the results of their own experimental trials.

Milk of different tests were standardized to a casein to fat ratio of 0.7. While this resulted in a slightly lower yield of cheese per hundred pounds of milk, it increased the yield of the products from a given quantity of milk. This was most apparent when the fat content of the normal milk was greater than 3.5 per cent.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Build or Remodel?

Nobody can be criticized very much for wanting to put off the construction of a new dairy barn, hog house or poultry house until he is sure just what type of house will best serve his needs. It is only fair to ask, though, whether the building now in use supplies all the fundamentals of good housing, ventilation, insulation, light, convenience, sanitation, etc. Some old buildings can be remodeled at low cost to supply these essentials—a concrete floor, more window space, a new roof, a ventilating system, insulation, modern equipment, a coat of paint. Prices of building materials are lower than they have been for a long time.—Farm Journal.

Feeding Soy Beans

Soy beans can be used satisfactorily as a protein feed for fattening cattle, Paul Gerlaugh, Ohio experiment station, points out. Cattle fed beans do not consume as much feed or gain as rapidly as cattle fed linseed or cottonseed meal. It is likely that the same thing would apply in a comparison of soy beans and soy bean oilmeal. The high oil content of the beans probably causes the difference in palatability. The Ohio tests showing that whole beans are better than ground beans for holding cattle on feed.—Prairie Farmer.

Agricultural Notes

Profitable pork production demands the use of good sanitary pastures.

The quality of the United States potato crop is probably the lowest on record, according to economists.

B. F. Lewis of Fountain, Pitt county, North Carolina, produced 8,682 pounds of pork from a litter of 15 pigs at six months of age. The animals were sold for a cents a pound, bringing $217.82 cash.

Tots' Smart Togs Made of Kidskin

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

THREE, four, five, six, sixteen or sixty, when it comes to being style-conscious, the fair sex is ever thus regardless of age. Certain it is that the elite juvenile set in these modern times is developing an amazing fashion-awareness—a fact most amusing but which nevertheless brings a challenge to designers of clothes for the very young which must be reckoned with seriously.

This call of the hour for "style" is meeting with an especially happy response in the realm of leather and kidskin apparel for tiny tots. Just now the kiddies who know what's what in the mode, are all excitement over the new kidskin and leather togs which are now being featured and which are just too cunning for words. You will agree, after glimpsing the costumes pictured here, with that they are all of that—as clever and winsome as leather artists can make them.

During a recent fashion show, when the little girl pictured to the left stepped out clad in this striking outfit made all of bronze kidskin, her appearance created nothing less than a sensation. From her smart square-toed shoes to her perky little chapeau she wears the ultra-fashionable bronze kid. The bronze kid coat has a modishly flared skirt and a vogueish collar. Belge lapin cuffs the sleeves and lines the collar and a bow of a bit of the fur peeks jauntily at the very top-notch of the crown of her hat. Of course the touch of fur is a note of supreme delight to this wee lady of fashion.

It is difficult to imagine anything more lovely and more modern than the adorable all-white kidskin ensemble shown to the right in the picture. This motor costume, as the designer chooses to call it, is the very newest of the new in little folk's fashions.

GREEN TAKES BIG ROLE FOR WINTER

Green is held to be the color emblematic of both envy and hope. And so, that is perhaps why we see it so much just now, the envy being that of the woman who admires our frock, coat or hat, and what the hope is you can fill in for yourselves.

But, whatever obvious or obscure reason may prevail, there is no doubt about it that green is one of the colors of this winter season. Since we have all become such adepts at using color, there is but scant fear of any one of us using the wrong shade of green, something that can easily happen unless one is very wary, and fully conscious of any defects of the complexion or coloring. A good hint is always dark green trimmed with black or brown; it is the bright greens that hold so much peril.

By all means go in for a diet of greens, but exercise caution. Brown, too, is a favorite color, and both green and brown are so much used together this season on both sides of the Atlantic.

Lace Frock Holds Own for Afternoon Doings

Nothing has yet been discovered that will quite take the place of the lace frock for late afternoon and informal evening wear, and at least one of these is to be found in every respect respecting Paris' couture collection. Worth's black lace dinner gown with flounces on the long sleeves and at the back of the skirt was very successful with the buyers, and is being extensively ordered by smart private clients at the moment. It's one of those dresses that are literally sartorial live-savers. Having once seen it, one wonders how one has ever got along without something of the sort.

Gloves to Match Hats

Whether you have always been a stickler for white gloves or not, you will find it hard to resist the gloves that match the hats this season. There are queer grape tones that match exactly the felt in the hats. There are red ones and green ones. And it must be admitted that they look extremely smart when well assembled.

PASTEL VELVET
By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Another party dress to carry through the midwinter season? Let these sketches of Paris frocks be your inspiration. They give accent to the vogue which at present is so outstanding for transparent velvet in pastel colorings or white or black for the formal gown. The distinctive feature of the white velvet frock, sketched to the left, is its graceful peplum which flares about the hips in a movement which is repeated about the hemline of the skirt. The drop shoulder gives to the other gown the original of which is black velvet, a pleasing departure from the conventional.

New Fabrics for Winter

Printed wools and velvets are smart for winter wear. In keeping with the season's vogue for quiet fabrics, however, the printed patterns are small and subdued in color. Brown velvets studded in dull yellow gold leaves and dark green wools patterned with light or green figures are indicative of the vogue.

Lesson for January 24*JESUS AND THE SAMARITAN WOMAN

LESSON TEXT—John 4:1-42.
GOLDEN TEXT—This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptance, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners: of whom I am chief.
PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Helps a Stranger.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Befriends a Foreigner.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus Talking with a Samaritan Woman.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How Jesus Deals with Sinners.

I. Jesus at Jacob's Well (vv. 1-6). The growing popularity of Jesus roused the envious opposition of the Pharisees which obliged him to leave Judea and go into Samaria. There was another way to reach Galilee, on the eastern side of the Jordan, the one used by many Jews to avoid contact with the despised Samaritans. He "must needs go through Samaria" in order to find this poor sinful woman and the needy citizens of Sychar. The great necessity which was upon him was to seek and to save that which was lost (Luke 19:10).

II. Jesus' Testimony to the Samaritan Woman (vv. 7-28). A favor asked (vv. 7-9). Jesus tactfully made a request which appealed to the woman's sympathy. Not only did the thirst of the weary traveler appeal to her, but the fact that he, being a Jew, asked a favor of her, showed his sympathy for her. In introducing the conversation, he referred to that which was uppermost in her mind; namely, water. This was the divine Teacher's point of contact. He soon passed from earthly water to the water of everlasting life which was in himself.

2. Jesus' tender dealing with this woman (vv. 10-15). He first appealed to her curiosity by declaring, "If thou knewest the gift of God" (v. 10). He knew the deep unrest of the soul of this sinful woman as she went on her way. He knew that if she really knew him, she would believe in him and be saved from her sins. Therefore, he first sought to get her attention. This appeal to her curiosity was followed by a promise which directed her attention to her deepest needs. There is a consciousness of deep need in every soul. In her efforts to satisfy her nature, this poor woman respected neither the law of God nor the rights of men. The deepest need of the soul can only be satisfied by Jesus Christ. The woman's reply, "Sir, give me this water that I thirst not," is the inarticulate cry of every human heart.

3. The woman convicted of her sins (vv. 15-19). Jesus succeeded in arousing her interest, but she did not really understand him. Before she could understand what the water of life is, she must be convicted of her sins. He skillfully gave the command which brought her face to face with the facts of her life that she was unwilling to confess. She did not argue with him, but became a humble inquirer. The soul must be convicted of its sin before there can be conversion.

4. The problem of worship submitted to Christ (vv. 20-24). This she did as soon as she perceived him to be a prophet. This indicates that he was succeeding in bringing her mind to spiritual things. Jesus, knowing the inner life of this woman, told her of the glad time, even then present, when true worshippers could hold intercourse with God anywhere. He showed her that the place of worship is unimportant, that the all-important thing is to have the true conception of God as brought through the Jews. He exposed the folly of a religion of form only, and showed that acceptable worship depends upon the condition of the heart.

5. The woman of Samaria, witnessing for Christ (vv. 25-29). When the disciples perceived that Jesus talked with the woman, they marveled, yet they hesitated to ask him for an explanation. The woman left her water pot and went into the city and said, "Come, see a man, which told me all things that ever I did: is not this the Christ?" As soon as she was converted she became an enthusiastic missionary.

III. Jesus Testifying to the Citizens of Sychar (vv. 40, 41). The woman's testimony brought the request from the Samaritans that Jesus tarry with them. He abode with them two days. Though they heard the woman's testimony, their belief was due to Christ's own word (v. 41).

IV. The Samaritans Witnessing for Christ (v. 42). They declared, "We know that this is indeed the Christ, the Saviour of the world." They confessed to the woman that their belief was not then due to her testimony, but to having heard him.

Two Bible Keys
Unless a man believe the Bible to be the word of God, containing the truth and nothing but the truth, he cannot understand it in its parts. Unless he believe that Jesus Christ not only has come, but also will yet come again, he cannot understand the Bible as a whole.—Painin.

One of the most important things you can do to make a teething baby comfortable is to see that little bowels do their work of carrying off waste matter promptly and regularly. For this nothing is better than Castoria, a pure vegetable preparation specially made for babies and children. Castoria acts so gently you can give it to young infants to relieve colic. Yet it is always effective, for older children, too. Remember, Castoria contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics—is absolutely harmless. When your baby is fretful with teething or a food upset, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Be sure you get genuine Castoria with the name:

Flexible Railway Ties

Flexible railway ties recently were announced as the discovery of a German inventor. They are nearly oval in cross section and are open at the bottom so they give to the weight of trains. Their open centers are filled with ballast. Steel plates keep them from slipping, says Popular Science Monthly.

THE STORY

Hiram Butterworth, miser, decides to leave his fortune to Elmer Clarke, a poor young nephew. He tells Abolom McPeake, his lawyer, of a deal forty years ago in which he swindled a man out of $40,000, and arranged for payment with interest. Butterworth dies suddenly, leaving a gossiping telegraph operator the town of Piarctos hears of Elmer's fortune before he does. Nellie Cathcart, Elmer's sweetheart, tells him his inheritance is more than a million. "Colorado Charlie" and his partner, Mac, decide to pluck Elmer.

CHAPTER IV—Continued

"Good Lord, Nellie, how you surprise me! Why, there are no social or intellectual contacts here, no—"

"Halt! The dust-brown ranks will stand fast!" Nellie commanded. "Only the day before yesterday a certain altruistic, ambitious and enthusiastic young man, by name Elmer Butterworth Clarke, was planning ways and means for transforming H. Wasservogel's defunct butcher shop into a number of profit-making enterprises to which he meant to cling while growing up with the country. Piarctos was a pretty nice town the day before yesterday, wasn't it?"

"Why, Elmer, if you lived in New York it would cost you thousands of dollars a year to support a membership in a rich man's gun club, whereas you and three other small-town sports control the best duck grounds in this country at a cost of about seventy-five dollars a year. The same is true of your trout fishing. You get just as good trap shooting in Piarctos as rich men do at Pinehurst, and there are just as good shots here, even if most of them do wear overalls instead of plus fours."

"I'm licked. You have entirely too many reasons, Nellie."

"I have more reasons if pressed for them."

"Well, I've been thinking I'd like to see the other side of the picture, Nellie."

Nellie's soft, brown, firm little hand came across the table and closed on Elmer's. "Dear old adventurous boy! Of course you want to see it, and you want to go prowling alone. I don't blame you. You yearn for liberty and independence and you've never known it. Elmer, step out and see the world. When you've seen all you want of it and find its rocks and dirt, noisy, gossiping, mean, cruel, good, tender and lovable people wherever you go, and that no spot on earth has a monopoly on life's pleasures, you might come back to me. I'll be so glad to have you! On the contrary, if you've changed your mind about me—well, I'll understand. I'd rather have you change your mind before marriage than after it. Sometimes I think that young men who marry nowadays give hostages to fortune."

"What a remarkable philosopher you've grown to be!" he exclaimed admiringly.

"I'm a warlock, dear. I play hunches and I have a hunch about you. Normally, you're too big for this town, but—when pain and anguish wring your brow, perhaps this town will be just right for you. At any rate, it will be not less than eleven months before your Uncle Hiram's estate can be distributed to you and—"

"How do you know, Nellie?"

"I'm a trust officer in a bank and trust officers have to know considerable about estates."

"Oh!"

"Estates of over ten thousand dollars usually drag through the probate courts that long."

"Then by golly, Nellie, I'm going to hop it to Muscatine, Iowa, and speed up the machinery of the law."

"I'd try if I were you, but it will not set you very far."

"I don't quite like your unreasonable preference for Piarctos as the scene of our married life, Nellie."

"My dear, I can take Piarctos or leave it alone. I merely said I preferred it to a big city."

"Oh!"

Nellie smiled wistfully as she noted his slight hesitation. "You've been to the Great War and you've seen something of the world, Elmer, but really you don't know very much about it," she reminded him. "I'm ages older than you. One sees so much of life, even in a small-town bank."

"You're certainly practical."

As Elmer walked back to the Smoke Shoppes, after parting with Nellie in front of the bank, it occurred to him that Nellie was not only practical but the most practical girl he had ever known.

While he did not take the trouble to analyze the slight feeling of discomfort that harassed him in the knowledge of her undoubted practicality and common sense, the fact was that, like ninety-nine and nine-tenths per cent of his sex, he yearned for a clinging vine rather than a lively upstanding wild flower, although of this he was happily unaware.

CHAPTER V

When Nellie returned to the bank after luncheon she went into Ansel Moody's office and for the second time perused the telegram which had arrived that morning from the First National Bank of Muscatine. It ran as follows:

"McPeake's estimate estate extremely conservative. Think appraisal will develop double that. Our counsel have read will and pronounce it absolutely air-tight and free from attack on any known grounds. Your customer sole legatee with exception one specific bequest of ten thousand. Will also instructs executor to pay a certain mortgage given to one Benedict Catherton."

together with interest as per terms of mortgage. Principal sum of mortgage forty thousand dollars. In event death Elmer Clarke before distribution estate his share goes to state university.

"First National Bank of Muscatine." Nellie sighed and retired to her desk, where she figured rapidly for half an hour. As she surveyed the result of her computations a gurgling little chuckle escaped her; then as if overcome with shame at her levity, her sea-blue eyes filled with tears. The following day was Saturday and the Piarctos Commercial Trust & Savings bank closed as usual at noon. About half past eleven Ansel P. Moody summoned Nellie to his private office, where she appeared he sat and glared at her ferociously over the tops of his square spectacles. After a half minute of this he spoke in a voice trembling with rage.

"Looky here, miss, if you expect to continue to work in this bank, you got ter git out of the insurance business."

Nellie sat down—unmoved. "Mr. Moody, this is the first intimation I have had that my work as an employee of this bank has been unsatisfactory. In fact, I laid the flattering unction to my soul that I was the most efficient person on your payroll."

"You're—an' your work's all right; I'm not kickin' at that. It's your side lines that rile me."

"You've known for a year that in my spare moments I have been selling all kinds of insurance. You have not hitherto objected to that provided my work in the bank did not suffer in consequence."

"Well, hereafter you cut it out. Hear me!"

Ernie Was Fast Worker, but Speed Didn't Count

Ernie was one of a group of friends on their way back from the Cape after a day in the water when a tire on one of the cars, went flat. After desperate tooting, the leading car was halted and the party in that machine, returning to volunteer aid, found that Ernie had made good progress in pulling off the damaged shoe.

With a deftness that surprised the party in view of the heat, Ernie soon had the ground covered with shoes, rim tools, nuts and what not. In a surprising time everything was fixed.

"Just let her down off that jack," he ordered one of the more immaculate in the party who was itching with an apparent urge to help. The jack was removed and the tire flattened in the road.

"What a swell job you did!" the

Made Their Choice

The noble ones of earth are those who have made their choice. They have thoughtfully asked what life meant, and they have tried to shape their course by the teachings and examples of the wise and good, of the successful ones of the past. They have studied the great characters—the men and women of intellect, of character, of purpose and achievement—and encouraged and inspired by their example, have been stimulated to do the utmost with the talents committed to them.—Rev. A. E. Moncreux Sims.

"Just why, please?"

"Recut your side lines tangle up in mine on't in a while. For instance, when I loaned Elmer Clarke that twenty thousand dollars yesterday on his unsecured note, you knew I did it becuz of his prospects."

"Now, then, I ain't got no assurance, have I, that Elmer'll live long enough to come into his fortune? I got to have some security for that loan, don't I? What security can I git from him now? Nothin' except life insurance. Well, I figure Elmer won't offer no objection to takin' out a policy to protect the bank, so I stroll in on the Smoke Shoppes this mornin' an' suggest it to him. He's right agreeable an' says he's already thought o' that, for which reason he's applied for a policy with a company represented in this town by you!"

"That is quite true. It occurred to me that you had overlooked suggesting the matter to Elmer when you made the loan, so I, realising that the bank should be protected, took Elmer out to luncheon yesterday, and between the soup and the nuts I sold him a hundred thousand dollar policy. The bank is a beneficiary to the extent of any approved claim against his estate and somebody else is the beneficiary of all that's left."

"Yes, but does this bank git a fifty-fifty cut on the commission you earn on that policy? That's what I'd like to know."

"Oh, so that's where the shoe pinches, is it? Well, Mr. Moody, I'm not going to give up my side line and I'm not going to continue to provide I permit you to graft off me. Consequently I shall have to accept your alternative and resign my position here. How much notice do you require?"

Old Ansel was mortally stricken—impaled on both horns of a dilemma. If he accepted Nellie's resignation, he would never, never find another employee like her. Also, he would most certainly alienate the hardly won affections of Elmer Clarke—and a healthy account from the fledgling millionaire would be worth many thousand yearly to the bank.

"You women make me sick," he growled. "You ain't got no sense of humorosity. Ain't a one of ye can take a joke." And he flounced up and out of the bank.

Nellie Cathcart's mellow, gurgling little laugh followed him, to give him the lie. After luncheon she went down to Elmer Clarke's mail-order garage. She found his old plug shooting dog, Noah, asleep on the lawn, so she invited Noah into Elmer's flivver and drove off to San Carlos, a town some thirty miles distant. Here she sent a telegram, requesting an answer by mail; and having thus spilt the guns of Old Lady Bray, as it were, she returned to Piarctos.

When Abolom McPeake came down to his office the following Monday morning, he found on his desk a most remarkable telegram. It ran as follows:

"Please write me giving details of the mortgage mentioned in Hiram Butterworth's will as having been given by Butterworth to one Benedict Catherton. My grandfather was Benedict Catherton, formerly of Davenport, Iowa, and I find among my deceased mother's papers a mortgage for forty thousand at eight per cent, payable semi-annually, on a farm in Mercer County, Illinois, to secure a promissory note of Hiram Butterworth given my grandfather. My mother was the sole heir of my grandfather's body, and I am the sole heir of hers. She is dead and gang echoed as Ernie looked around in disgust.

It was quickly found that Ernie had pulled off the punctured shoe and then put it back on again, at the same time the spare, all pumped up and rearing to go was still lying within his reach.—Brookton Enterprise.

Rats Victims of Oysters

On the northeast coast of Ireland, near Donegal, oysters have been growing to enormous size, and it was observed that thousands of rats were going down to the beach, never to return. One day a fisherman found the answer. A rat crept up to an oyster in shallow water. There was a high-pitched screech—and the next wave covered both bivalve and rodent. The rat's nose was caught between the oyster's shells and he had been dragged to death.

Thousands of rats have died in this manner, for the shellfish is inevitably the victor. The appetite for oysters around Donegal has diminished, but so has the rat menace, so the people are satisfied.—London Answers.

Wonder of Nature

Even the strongest men find it difficult to lift more than their own weight. Yet, a bluebottle fly can lift more than 50 times its own weight, while it can draw a load that is 150 times heavier than itself.

so is my grandfather. Mortgage dated August 10, 1882, deficiency judgment dated March 23, 1887. Do not telegraph, as desire keep this matter absolutely secret and telegrams to Piarctos are broadcast by operator. Answer.

"Nellie C. Cathcart, Piarctos, California."

"Christopher Columbus!" murmured Abolom McPeake. "What do you think of that?" He rang for his secretary. "The Butterworth file," he commanded.

The girl brought it. It took Mr. McPeake less than a minute to unearth a duplicate copy of a mortgage given to Benedict Catherton, of Davenport, Iowa, by Hiram Butterworth, on a section of land in Mercer county, Illinois, to secure a promissory note for forty thousand dollars at eight per cent interest payable semi-annually, and if not so paid semi-annually, to be added to the principal and bear interest at a like rate. The mortgage bore the date August 10, 1882. A minute later the lawyer had unearthed a record of a deficiency judgment against Hiram Butterworth, in favor of Benedict Catherton, dated March 23, 1887.

He sat staring at the telegram. "Nellie C. Cathcart," he murmured. "Where have I heard that name Cathcart recently?" Cathcart, Cathcart. Ah, yes! N. C. Cathcart, trust officer of the bank that made that report on Elmer Clarke to old Hiram."

He took the letter in question from the file and read it again.

"N. C. Cathcart, trust officer, is a girl. N. C. Cathcart is Nellie C. Cathcart. A girl, by thunder—and a smart girl! The Piarctos Commercial Trust & Savings bank didn't make this report. Nellie C. Cathcart made it. Oh, Lord, for a secretary with brains like Nellie! She's up to snuff. She knew all about Hiram Butterworth and she made it strong—so strong it knocked old Hiram clear off his perch. She figured on doing just that—and she succeeded. She ought to be president of that bank and I'll bet she will be—after that mortgage is paid."

He reread the letter. "Between the lines I seem to see something," he soliloquized. "Nellie Cathcart is in love with Elmer Clarke. That's why she wants this little discovery kept a profound secret. Going to surprise Elmer on their wedding day, I suppose. Bully for you, Nellie. You're all right and I'll play the game with you. Now, how did she learn of this clause in the will so promptly? That's easy. Bullard, of James, Bullard and Yohn, counsel for the bank downstairs, was in to look at the will just before I took it up to the courthouse and she, the bank furnished it, whereupon Nellie, clinched her case and wired me. Well, good news shouldn't be hoarded. I'm going to disobey Nellie and send her a telegram to Piarctos."

He did it. It was at the bank waiting for Nellie when she got there that same morning. It read:

"Dear Nellie. You win. Congratulations. Marry I come to the wedding? Mum's the word."

Contrary to Ansel P. Moody's declaration that Nellie had no sense of humorosity, she wired back immediately, straight message:

"Dear Abt. You're awfully fresh, but I like you, so you may come to my wedding. As you are not a banker, it probably has never occurred to you that fun at six per cent compounded semi-annually practically double every twelve years. O Time, where is thy sting at eight per cent? How about income taxes, federal inheritance taxes? Who gets this last, Iowa or California or both? Am not grating free legal advice, either. Send your bill for the answer."

The following morning Old Lady Bray was again "knocked all of a heap" when she took the following night letter over the wire:

"Nellie, you are priceless. Our revered Uncle Sam cannot get his hands on any income earned or due prior to March 15, 1918, although he does participate in all income from interest collected thereafter, and I do not see how we can dodge it."

"Federal inheritance tax may not apply at all in this case because the legal heir of Catherton's body inherits through his daughter. Hence if grand daughter can prove that this mortgage was appraised as worthless by the appraisers of her mother's estate and mother's estate probated on that basis, the law cannot be retroactive and claim an inheritance tax on an estate that has devolved value long after estate has been closed."

"If Catherton's daughter died more than five years ago, statute of limitations acts as further bar to collection of inheritance tax on her estate now. Catherton's granddaughter cannot now be regarded as a legatee just because dated in value, for this new value is not a bequest because will gives authority to pay a debt of honor long overdue. Of course, internal revenue collector will try to collect, but if he does I will lick him at every turn. For the same reason that federal inheritance tax does not apply in this case, state inheritance cannot apply either."

"Oh joy, oh joy, spring is here and I am so glad. How lovely to find somebody who can laugh, not to say sneer, at the Washingtonian wiles of finance! No charge for this advice. After all, I have no sporting blood and to prove it I shall even refrain from sending this telegram collect."

"Mac."

"Isn't Abolom McPeake a perfect dear?" Nellie soliloquized. "He has told me everything I want to know without telling Old Lady Bray anything."

No Need to Sigh for Those "Good Old Days"

Factory working hours varied with the sun back in the 1850s, for candles provided unsatisfactory illumination. Each employee was given a "bell card," showing what time the factory starting bell would ring for each day.

A typical card of the period, issued by the Robbins & Lawrence company, machinery builders of Windsor, Vt., and reproduced in the seventy-fifth anniversary number of the Iron Age, reveals that startling time ranged from 6 in the summer months, to 7:20 during the winter. Stopping time, too, followed the sun, from 6 in the summer, and as early as 4:42 in December. The average for the year was ten working hours.

But getting to work at 6 was not the worst of it. For some unknown reason the "wake-up" bell was rung an hour and a half earlier, at the ungodly hour of 4:30. Come to think of it, they probably needed the full 90 minutes between rising and getting to work. For they had no electric razors, no gas stoves to boil the coffee or quickly cook the eggs, no trolleys, buses or flivvers to shorten the trip from home to shop.

No wonder our grandfathers were bearded gents. Imagine hopping out of a nice warm bed with the thermometer at 10 above, inside and outside the house, lighting an ice-cold stove, waiting for the water to boil, and drawing with shivering hand a straight razor over a stiff beard with a gooseflesh foundation. Those were the good old days!

World Prone to Judge Value by Appearance

Fifty years ago it was said that only a millionaire could afford to be careless in his attire. That exception no longer holds. Today every one, rich or poor, who expects to keep a place in the civic procession, must give heed to his personal appearance. The nearer a man is to the anxious seat, the more marked should be the straight creases in his trousers. Progress in every white-collar line of business depends to a considerable extent on keeping the collar white. In other words, personal appearance, other things being equal, is the determining factor whether the road ahead will lead up or down. Slovenliness in thought and action—and such a suggestion is fatal in the modern business world. Competition was never so keen and he who would meet it successfully must dress the part.

Fortunately, in hard or easy times, the law of compensation remains on the job. When money and work are harder to get, clothing of good quality is easier to obtain. Never did the dollar go as far in maintaining personal appearance. Never was the opportunity more patent for stocking the wardrobe before the good times return and clothes will no longer be procurable at present low prices. Polonius' advice to his son is even more applicable in America today than it was in the old realm of Denmark:

"Pshaw!" said Maggie. "It smells like stale oysters, don't it?"

Kit Carson Memento

The words "Kit Carson, 1848," were recently found carved into a tree near Mud Lake, in the Eldorado National Forest. The historical discovery was made by a United States forest service trail crew. Six inches of new wood had grown over the original blaze. Another tree carved by the famous pioneer is still standing in the Kit Carson pass.

Chapel Service

Chapel Service on Tuesday morning was conducted without the accompaniment of the piano, the repairs for it not having yet arrived. However, the assembly got on very well with the singing of "America." The talk was given by Rev. Walter Coburn of Coburntown. He told us the parable of the Good Samaritan and likened the needs of the world today to the needs of the sick man by the wayside. The remedy for some of these ills at least lies within the power of each of us. He closed by enjoining each and everyone of us to be the Good Samaritan. This talk was followed by prayer by Reverend Studabaker.

Mr. Walter Coburn of Coburntown was a visitor in the school on Tuesday. He held chapel service in the morning and visited classes until noon. In the afternoon he substituted for Miss Reed.

Mr. Russell did after school duty for Miss Reed on Thursday evening. The teachers rotate turns from three until four o'clock when the buses return for their second trips.

Florance Wasson has been absent from school all week. It is reported that he has gone on a trip to California.

The attendance in the grades has been very good so far this month.

The basket ball boys have been slowing up slightly on practice the past week; but they will be hard at it again soon, as they have a full house of games for the month of February—five in all.

The new books continue to be as popular as ever. At no time has one of them been on the shelves as long as two days. Some of their glamor is even carrying over to certain of the older books which have been on the shelves for years.

A new fire alarm system is being installed by Vernon Kline. The wiring is being done so that the alarm may be sounded from the basement, the first or second floor. The old system was somewhat unhandy, since discovery of fire in the basement necessitated a trip up a couple of flights of stairs to sound the alarm.

Mr. Sheets of Auburn was a caller at the school Friday. He brought the repairs for the piano and installed them.

The Home Economics Cooking class did not serve soup Thursday as nearly all of the girls were very busy writing on exams.

Edith Wade of the freshman class has been absent all week due to illness with tonsillitis. For this cause also she was unable to take the examinations.

Lawrence Wappes was ill also, but he was able to be at school Friday.

The schedule for the second semester is to offer courses in sociology, advanced algebra, geography, and reading.

The senior class will soon be deciding when and where the pictures for the class group picture are to be taken.

On Examinations

My papers all are graded. The averages are struck. Most of the pupils made the grade.

But some did run a-muck. I've made a resolution: 'To teach will all my skill.' Perhaps with extra effort These pupils I can fill.

With useful information That will help to brace them up. So that the last exams this term We'll find the average up.

On Examinations

Now exams are over. I sit me down to dream. If I should flunk them all by chance, I think that I should scream.

But if by dint of luck so good I pass in one or two, I'll call the stars to witness it. And say that I am through. With study hard and worry, too And all canned information. And when the last semester's o'er I'll like the situation.

SALADS IN WINTER

Do not allow yourselves to get out of the "Salad a day" habit this winter. In summer, when so many salad ingredients are to be had, there is little danger of our forgetting the salad. In cold weather, we may slip if we are not careful.

But there are still plenty of salad ingredients at hand. Lettuce, celery, dates, nuts, oranges, bananas, apples, cabbage, onions, and canned fruit and berries are always available.

Try this delicious salad, for example: Six orange sections, three or four stoned dates stuffed with nut meats—served on crisp lettuce. Or cut two slices of seedless orange thick, and place a thin slice of Bermuda onion between. Garnish with sliced stuffed olives and serve on the proverbial lettuce.

For a third winter salad, dip four or five orange slices in slightly warmed honey which has been placed in a saucer. Then dip both sides of slices in coconut, arrange on lettuce and dot with bit of canned or maraschino cherry.

POLL TAX MUST BE PAID

Receipt Necessary To Obtain State Store Licenses

In making applications for the 1932 state store license, it will be necessary to include a poll tax receipt with the application, it was announced today by Russell H. Blanchard, DeKalb County Store License Deputy.

The poll tax receipt should be included with his application and with a self-addressed stamped return envelope when forwarded to the State Board of Tax Commissioners. The store tax is affected by the state act prohibiting the issuance of certain licenses to persons who do not have receipts or other evidence showing that they have paid their poll tax.

A special candle light service will conclude the services at the M. P. Church Sunday evening. Try and attend this service. 411.

PITTSBURGH MAN
WINS AWARD

Robert Johnson, son of Rev. and Mrs. C. S. Johnson, of North Bryant Avenue, a student at Boston University, has been awarded the Lucinda Biwell Beebe fellowship for a year of post graduate study abroad.

The scholarship is awarded on the basis of character, scholarship and promise of creative power. Mr. Johnson received the Rector scholarship at DePauw University for four years. During his undergraduate course he played the trumpet in the school symphony orchestra, and traveled abroad with the orchestra in the summer. He is a member of Phi Delta Theta Fraternity.

He received his Master of Arts degree last June, from Boston University, and plans to study at the University of Berlin next year.—Pittsburgh Press, Wednesday, January 20.

St. Joe citizens feel proud of "Bob," (as he was familiarly known) and extend congratulations.

SURPRISE PARTY

On last Friday evening, January 22, a number of young people from Hopewell and Rehoboth, very pleasantly surprised Mr. Vernon Stimmann at his home near the Bear Creek School.

The group gathered at the school house and walked to the Stimmann home. The surprise was complete.

The evening was spent in games and contest. At a late hour refreshments were served. After lunch the guests departed.

Those present were: Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Stimmann, Hazel Stimmann, Martha Wiley, Opal Rinehold, Helen Mason, Beanie Peters, Frances Sailer, Mildred Carnahan, Elizabeth Calvert, Julia Bennett, Anna E. Ryan, Ruth Strong, Orville Miley, Walter Rinehold, Harry Farver, Harold Yoder, Raymond Foltz, Ivan Strong, James Ryan, Lawrence Wapness, Carl Strong, Merl Wapness, Earl Farver and Mrs. Ray Farver.

IMPROVING RURAL ROADS

We are learning that poor roads, impassable during part of each year, are one of the farmer's greatest problems. Those who live in cities, from which fine paved highways stretch away in all directions, probably have a difficult time understanding his predicament. But if they can imagine themselves living on an isolated farm, without means for going to town, or for receiving medical or fire-fighting service in case of need, they will have an inkling into the plight of millions of American farm families.

The good roads movement must be extended into rural districts, and amount of traffic must not be the major consideration. In any sound consideration of permanent and substantial "farm relief," the problem of good roads for fast, economical transportation of persons and goods, should play an important part.

In DeKalb county, the rural road problem is pretty well taken care of, and in Concord, Spencer and Newville, Wilmington and Jackson townships, practically all of their roads are gravel, with but few miles in each unit, Indiana stands high in hard-surfaced roads.

It is due every farmer that a year around road shall be afforded him.

CLERK MAKES REPORT OF OFFICE RECORDS

Approximately one divorce was granted to nine marriage licenses issued in 1931 in DeKalb county, the annual report of County Clerk Glenn Potter reveals.

The number of marriages was 306, and there were 33 divorces. Of the latter, 28 were to wives and 5 to husbands.

The previous year there were 255 licenses, 39 divorces and one annulment, or a ratio of 1 to 6 1/2. The number of criminal cases filed during 1931 was 132, which was practically the same as in 1930. Forty-nine cases were dismissed, 9 sentences were suspended, 32 were fined only, 2 were sentenced to jail and 39 were sent to penal institutions. There were 41 cases pending at the close of the year. Nineteen cases for driving while intoxicated were filed in 1931, as compared with 5 in 1930. There were 25 cases for public intoxication, a reduction of 1.

During 1931, 407 civil cases were filed, as compared with 330. Vened cases numbered 42, a reduction from 53. Five cases were venued to other counties, 142 were dismissed, judgments were entered in 229, and 307 were pending at the end of the year. The number of letters of administration issued was 100; guardianships, 22; decrees of foreclosure, 24; sheriff's sales, 26; and adjudged of unsound mind, 8. In 1930, there were 19 decrees of foreclosure and 18 sheriff's sales.

PLAY WENT OVER
GOOD FOR JUNIORS

A fair sized audience greeted the appearance of the three-act drama of the Junior class of the St. Joe High School, Tea Toper Tavern, on Friday evening of last week.

The cast consisted of fourteen students, six boys and eight girls, being a clever little story built around the efforts of a number of young misses who endeavored to launch forth in the business of operating a tea tavern. Their difficulties, and how they met them, chief of which, was a quarantine placed upon the house, afforded some comical and embarrassing situations. But, "all's well that ends well," they say, and all did end well, for each one at the finish obtained their goal, marriage. Taken as a whole, the play was creditable, and expresses a lot of effort upon the part of these young students and the directors to put forth as pleasant an entertainment as we were permitted to witness.

Between acts, a number of popular song hits were given by Miss Gladys Dressel, a member of the high school, accompanied by Earl William Kinsey. They were well received by the audience. Juniors, ye did well.

Lights of New York

By WALTER TRUMBULL

Helen Worden, well-known newspaper woman, has a cat by the name of Arnold. Whether the animal was named for Benedict Arnold or Arnold Daly, I do not know, but at any rate it is a highly favored cat, which has long been treated like a king by members of the Worden family, which formerly resided on West Sixty-seventh street. Another resident of that street was and is William Beebe, the famous naturalist and fish man. Arnold, like other kings, grew tired of the cream and trapping of royalty and used to try to get away from it all. His method of egress was by the window. After some time spent in seeing life incoherent, he would return in the same manner he had left. Now Sixty-seventh is a peculiar street. On the long block which runs west from Central park are some of the most attractive apartments in the city. Also in that block is one of the city's few remaining blacksmith shops and also a lumber yard and paint shop. In his wanderings, Arnold must have visited the latter because, on one occasion, he returned covered with light gray paint. Now, Arnold, in his natural state, is a black cat. When, therefore, a member of the Worden family saw a gray animal crouched on the window sill, the natural thing to do was to throw a pitcher of water at it. Indignant at such treatment and at not being recognized in his own domain, Arnold departed and was not seen for three days. By this time some of the paint had worn off.

Being treated royally, Arnold was scarcely to blame for getting the idea that anything he desired was his right of birth. It happened that Mr. Beebe, either on his trips to the Galapagos islands, his descents to the bottom of the sea or on some of his other wanderings, had collected a number of rare fish with weird eyes, fins and tails. These he had in small aquariums in his apartment. In a highly mysterious manner, these fish began to disappear. The story goes that one day Mr. Beebe happened to see Arnold put a paw in his mouth and dislodge a fish bone from his throat. There was a bit of controversy over the matter, which may be one reason that Arnold and the Wordens moved to Park avenue.

A woman I once knew had a cat. It was not a royal beast, such as Arnold. Its pedigree might have read, Stray out of Alley. This cat actually fell into a pot of red paint and became thickly coated. The woman who had taken it in had one of the kindest hearts in the world and decided that something must be done. She had heard of human beings who had glided themselves for some reason, dying, because all their pores were clogged. The only remedy she could think of was to try to remove the paint by turpentine. This took off not only the paint, but the hair. I never shall forget my first sight of that cat after the operation. A cat without its hair is the most startling sight I have ever seen. With a round head, thin body, and long legs it looks like some creature out of a nightmare. I never knew whether that cat became normal again or not.

Thomas Mitchell has a dog named Jean. Mr. Mitchell, who is the author of such plays as "Little Accident" and "Cloudy with Showers," claims that Jean is descended from the bloodhounds with which he once played in "Uncle Tom's Cabin," and also that he cannot write unless the dog sits beside him. He says that when he gets stuck for a third act, the dog crawls around under the furniture and noses up the rugs until it discovers an idea. Phil Dunning, hearing of the dog's ability, borrowed it while he was writing his latest play.

Few persons appear to know that Samuel Merwin, the novelist, is an authority on oriental history. Mr. Merwin has spent considerable time in the Far East and is especially interested in the story of the Mongols. One of his other hobbies is tennis.

Among those unaffected by the depression is a little old lady whose son, long ago, bought her an annuity. She lives as she always has and insists that the depression is only a state of mind.

How It Started

By Jean Newton

WHY IS IT "BOULEVARD"?

THE English word "boulevard" which we know to be practically synonymous with "avenue" is a corruption of the German "Bollwerk" which is a cognate of our "bulwark" and originally indicated the site of ancient fortifications.

A story in a nutshell—but what, you may reasonably inquire, have fortifications to do with "avenue"? Therein lies the story of the age-long press of humans to escape their confines—the eternal struggle for elbow-room.

Most ancient fortifications took the form of a wall which encircled the city. As the population grew, the overgrown settled beyond the walls, which had to be removed, leaving a lane through a crowded quarter, this lane subsequently being known as a boulevard—corruption of "bollwerk" or foundation.

"He Is Above-Board"

A PERSON known to be straightforward, who is honest, trustworthy and does things without concealment—such a person is one who enjoys the reputation of being above-board.

A colorful word is this, though not upon the surface. For investigation reveals that "above-board" comes to us directly from the gambling table.

Literally, "above-board" means "over the table." It was originally applied to describe so-called "honest" gamblers who were known never to cheat; who handled all of their cards above the table.

There, it was presumed, no opportunity was afforded for the changing of cards or for any other form of deception.

After Causing Crash

Medford, Mass.—A certain local dog doesn't cry over spilled milk. It was running itself on a curstione when a motor truck appeared. John Amlaw, driver, swerved to avoid the dog and wrecked the truck, spilling 800 quarts of milk and cream on the street.

After drinking its fill of milk, the dog, unharmed, departed.

Hot Cross Buns.—Beat one egg slightly, add three tablespoonfuls of corn oil, one-fourth cupful of sugar, one-half yeast cake dissolved in one-fourth cupful of lukewarm water, add the scalded milk (using one cupful) to the egg mixture and when cool add the softened yeast, one tablespoonful of salt and three cupfuls of flour with one-half cupful of seeded raisins. Cut the raisins into quarters and place in a warm place to rise overnight. Shape in the morning into large biscuits, place an inch apart to rise, brush with beaten egg and when risen, bake in a hot oven. Cool and make a cross on the top of each bun with frosting; frost with confectioner's sugar and water.

Traveling Laboratory

A traveling entomological laboratory for the department of agriculture in Tanganyika is under construction at Glasgow. The motor laboratory will be used specifically for malaria investigation. The interior measures ten feet by six feet and five windows are fitted—two on each side and one on the door, which is at the rear. The windows, louvers and other openings are covered with copper gauze on the inside to render them proof against the dangerous tsetse fly. The van is also fitted with a special electrical plant.

Harold's Mother Knew Answer

"Yes, sir, I am certainly proud of my little boy," says Mrs. H. M. Smith, 421 Topoka Ave., Topoka, Kansas. "He's five and weighs fifty-seven pounds. He's the picture of health as you can see, and I feel like he'll always be that way as long as I can get California Fig Syrup. I have used it with him ever since he was a year old. I knew what to give him for his colds and his feverish, upset spells because Mother used California Fig Syrup with all of us as children. I have used it freely with my boy and he loves it. It always fixes him up, quick."

In many homes, like this, the third and fourth generations are using pure, wholesome California Fig Syrup because it has never failed to do what is expected of it. Nothing so quickly and thoroughly purges a child's system of the souring waste which keeps him cross, feverish, headachy, bilious, half-sick, with coated tongue, bad breath, and no appetite or energy as long as it is allowed to remain in the little stomach and bowels. Fig Syrup gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act as Nature intends them to do, and helps build up and strengthen weak, pale and underweight children. Over four million bottles used a year shows its popularity. The genuine, endorsed by physicians for 50 years, always bears the word "California."

Optimistic Doll

One of the most popular novelties displayed at the Leipzig fair last fall was a fortune-telling doll which announced hopeful prophecies of Germany's future. An ingenious device made it possible for the doll to display cards announcing short but pertinent opinions in a highly optimistic spirit. The doll was named Madame Lenormand, after the famous fortune-teller.

Parachutes for Airplanes

Passengers from falling cabin airplanes will have very little about which to worry in the future, according to Modern Mechanics and Inventions Magazine. A new extra large parachute, attached to the cabin which will be fastened by temporary stays, will carry the passengers to safety without their having to leave the cabin.

Lectures Started

Authorities on economics, psychology and other subjects have inaugurated the second series of "Listen and Learn" lectures under the auspices of the National Advisory Council on Radio in Education, over coast-to-coast networks.

Dr. Robert M. Hutchins, president of the University of Chicago, started the spring series in January when he and representatives of the Council outlined the lecture courses to follow. The programs are heard every Saturday over NBC-WEAF facilities.

The series is scheduled for twenty weeks, closing with a valedictory program the last week in May.

Among the speakers, International trade, the tariff and industrial planning are economic subjects to be touched upon by speakers such as James Harvey Rogers of Yale, Ernest M. Patterson of Pennsylvania, F. W. Taussig of Harvard, George Henry Soule, Jr., editor of The New Republic, and Walton H. Hamilton of Yale.

Changes and growth in personalities, animal behavior and psychology in education are topics to be taken up by Fred A. Moss of George Washington University, Henry W. Nissen of Yale, Frank N. Freeman of Chicago, and others.

Public response to the initial lectures broadcast in the fall indicated, according to the Council, that they reached listening groups in the home, school, special neighborhood gatherings and even fishermen of Nova Scotia.

PATRIOTIC SONGS

The songs that thrill Americans, patriotic selections written by inspired composers, will be played in the February National 4-H club program of the National Farm and Home Hour by the United States Marine Band.

The concert will be another program in the series by the Marine Band on "Learning to Know America's Music."

Beginning with "The Star Spangled Banner," the renditions will swing through "America," and the lively strains of "Dixie." These will be followed with "Yankee Doodle," "America the Beautiful," "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean," "Hail Columbia," and a more recent song written when the United States Army was moving to the European battle front, "Over There."

The programs are designed to acquaint and familiarize the 550,000 4-H club members of the United States with the music which is typical of America.

Each month an additional concert will be provided by the Marine Band. On March 5 America's hymns and religious songs will be featured. The programs are broadcast over a coast-to-coast network.

The series, which promises to be one of the most entertaining features of the National Farm and Home Hour during the winter months, will contain much basic forestry information of interest to both town and country listeners.

Carver Wells, adventurer, explorer and lecturer, who starts a new series of programs over an NBC network next month under the title "Adventures in the Tropics," says that if all the bugs in Texas were rolled into one hog, they, or it, could rove out on a Panama Canal with ease and dispatch.

A lion's roar in the studios of the National Broadcasting Company is produced, not by a lion's vocal cords, but with a bass viol howl drawn across a length of hemp covered with rosin.

Harvey Hays, well known to radio listeners for his interpretations of outdoor roles, will play the part of the forest ranger. Wise in the ways of forest uses and protection through long experience in the fields, the character will often find himself in amusing situations with his sub assistant whose earnestness sometimes overwhelms his better judgment.

In presenting Organ Melodies, Irma Glen has the three-fold job of speaking the verse while she plays the organ with feet and hands, and watches the music, prose, and stop watch.

Buenos Aires

Annual Cattle Show of Buenos Aires.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.)

THE world's largest market is planned for a five-block tract in Buenos Aires, Argentina. The market will have access to all railroads entering the city and also direct communication, by tunnel, with the city's port.

No city in the United States is so important to us as Buenos Aires is to Argentina. It handles four-fifths of all Argentina's trade, and houses 20 per cent of all the nation's 10,000,000 inhabitants. All its 2,000,000 people are either Europeans or of European descent. This is true of only one other Latin American city—Montevideo.

Three times as big as Spain's largest city, modern Buenos Aires—as expanded and rebuilt in the last 80 years—is conspicuous in all the world for its magic growth.

The whole 25,000-mile railway system of Argentina has its focus here—the finest railroads in South America. No great motor highways radiate from the city, because the vast pampas afford no road-making materials. But by rail and river Buenos Aires handles more than half as much freight as the port of New York, and the net tonnage of ships calling each year is equal to all that passes through the Panama canal.

Not trade alone makes it great. Its social, artistic and political attractions rank it among the world's most dazzling capitals. To it flock the rich, the influential, the intelligent of all Argentina. "Our country as a whole would develop faster," said one prominent banker, "if more of our best brains would stay in the provinces."

Stock Farms Are Enormous.

Yet, although so many land owners live in the city, the swift, prodigious growth of herds and farming on the vast campos is an economic phenomena in this comparatively new country. In Europe the Argentine visitor is noted among hotels, resorts and shopkeepers for the freedom with which he spends money. These immense incomes are mostly from the soil.

One Estancia in Santa Fe province runs 50,000 cattle, and boasts of prize bulls costing $10,000 each and upwards. There are 25,000 hogs, 1,200 horses, a creamery making 4,000 pounds of butter daily for export to England, a private telephone system, a rambling chalet set in an artificial forest of imported trees, swimming pools, tennis courts—a princely estate that would make even a Texas cattle king dumb with astonishment. Similar ranches lie about Buenos Aires; others are far away, on the pampas. Their number, size, and money-making organization amazes the tourist, with school-book memories of woodcuts showing a hard-riding gaucho swinging a three-balled lasso over his head and chasing a loughorn steer—or an ostrich.

Nature is kind to Buenos Aires. Up the Parana are the majestic falls of Iguazu, and Guayra, solemn and stupendous, ranking with Niagara and Victoria in Africa. Up the Andes and under the shadow of the snow-capped highest mountain in the Western World—a cogwheel railway that lifts you in a few hours from green plains to Alpine heights and snow-dusted 20,000 feet deep, where Argentine soldiers train on skis. Winter hotels are here now—a new El Morito. And there is ancient Cordoba, historic Tucuman, the famous bahia of Rosario.

And as melons and oranges rush to our East from California and Florida, so Argentina's fruits flow into Buenos Aires. It lives well. Whole trainloads of fresh grapes come from the famed vineyards of Mendoza—and many reach our own markets. New York is at one end, Buenos Aires at the other, of a busy trade route. Now both sea and sky ships serve it. And ships are "ceaseless shuttles weaving the fabric of international commerce and good will."

American Investments Heavy.

Mutual trade has brought huge American investments to Buenos Aires; notably in packing houses, public utilities and banks. Two Yankee concerns alone control more than 100 light and power units in Argentina. Here, too, you see the new policy of great American corporations applied, by which now their Argentine employees are encouraged to become stockholders.

Youth, vitality, sheer enjoyment of living, they are the attributes of Buenos Aires. Shiny new motor cars; fascinating, Paris-like shop windows; are lights gliding on well-dressed midnight crowds in brilliant Calle Florida; cafes, casinos, high-priced restaurants and hotels, all packed with chattering, laughing people. Endless places of amusement, including the great Grecian Colon Theater; and, on billboards, many names familiar to Broadway: Titta Schlipa, Chailpin, Spinelli, Mistinguette, "Pollicius Parlatens," they call the "talkies."

And still it grows. Here lands the immigrant stream. Bearded men in boots, carrying bundles; wandering boys and girls, chattering in strange Slang of Latin tongues; bewildered mothers, their heads wrapped in shawls, hard-handed women bent from work, carrying babies and still more bundles—you see them all come slowly down gangplanks from European ships to stand a bit on the busy wharf and stare at Buenos Aires.

Argentina needs these. She has one-third as much land as the United States; but only as many people as live in and about New York City. Or about one and one-third per square mile, as against 400 in the British Isles.

Italians, English, Spanish, French, Germans, Swiss, American, all mingle. So cosmopolitan is the city that its great papers—La Nacion and La Prensa—must serve news from everywhere. Their circulation is enormous; their advertising huge. The quality, completeness and accuracy of what they print challenges the thought of every visiting journalist. Their absorbing Sunday rotogravures, their feature articles on sport, travel, international affairs, science, literature and art—many by world famous writers—astonish the newcomer, at first. Then he reflects: this is a great world city. It thinks like any other; and acts as Paris does, or Berlin, or New York.

Modern but Exotic.

Italian workmen with power drills tear up good pavements. New buildings rise higher and higher. Air stunts stunt in Palermo field, and Yankee free-lance flyers come peddling new planes. A man in fancy gaucho dress, as obsolete now as old time wild west cowboy gear, coils a live snake about his neck and hawks patent medicines. A communist tries to harangue a crowd, and police beat him away. Children ride tame llamas in the parks. A weakened little man struggles through traffic with a huge basket of coconuts, and offers them to a world which seems to spurn coconuts.

Around the great Diagonal of the financial center grin, towering banks, the yellow Wall Street. Subways, long suburban trains, screaming newsboys, 50,000 football fans jammed before a loudspeaker on Avenida de Mayo—you see this city—greatest in South America.

Its fog suggests San Francisco. Its flat expanse is like Chicago. The vast plains beyond, with endless leagues of corn, wheat and cattle, conjure up Kansas, or the Illinois prairies. And mules! Fat, with good harness, they compete with trucks. You see a team draw aside, to let a luxurious motor lorry pass hauling gleaming race horses out to the track of the Tijuana-like Jockey club. An unusual organization this is. Its downtown club-house, gorgeous as a senate chamber, dominates all others.

A member may ask you to hunt partridges at a great estancia on the pampas. For many interesting hours a train hauls you past queer big corn-cobs shaped like tanks; wind mills; high-wheeled pampa wagons; endless riders in flat black hats, baggy breeches, short boots, flying ponchos, riding with short stirrups on clumsy saddles covered with sheep's wool.

Leagues of wire fence stretch far as the eye can see, and artificial groves of imported trees dot the pampas. You stop at a lonely prairie station—for all the world like Kansas west of Dodge City—where you are to hunt. Partridge are plentiful; so are ostriches.

Riding back to Buenos Aires you take the day coach, to hear cowmen talk. It is like riding, in old days, in the caboose of a cattle train from Texas up to Kansas City. Everybody talks herds, horses, fodder, calves, branding and market prices. Attention hunting. "Our boys never waste a cartridge on a partridge," says a cowman. "They use a horse-hair noose at the end of a pole—they just ride the bird down and loop that over his neck. And, anyway, roasted armadillo is better than partridge—not so dry."

JESUS FEEDS THE MULTITUDE

LESSON TEXT—John 6:1-14; 33-51

GOLDEN TEXT—And Jesus said unto them, I am the bread of life; he that cometh to me shall never hunger; and he that believeth on me shall never thirst.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Feeds a Hungry Crowd.

JUNIOR TOPIC—What Jesus Did With a Boy's Lunch.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Sympathy of Jesus With Human Need.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Jesus the Bread of Life.

I. Jesus' Compassion on the Multitude (vv. 1-5a, cf. Matt. 14:14).

The sight of a crowd always excited the Lord's sympathy. He knew that they were as sheep without a shepherd. Besides, they were so ignorant that they had no appreciation of him. Added to this was their physical hunger. This condition aroused the Saviour's pity. How true this is of the multitude today! The crowd surges about us as sheep without a shepherd, having no one to care for them. Yet down deep in their hearts is a hunger for God and the truth.

II. Jesus' Conference With the Disciples Touching the People's Need (vv. 5b-9).

The inquiry of Philip was not for the Lord's benefit, for he knew what he would do (v. 8). His object was: 1. To teach them their sense of obligation to the multitude. We all need to be taught the wonderful truth that God has made man his partner in the salvation of the world. We are workers together with God (II Cor. 8:1). It is the very highest privilege as well as a most solemn obligation to operate with God in saving the millions who are groping in darkness.

2. To teach them their helplessness in the face of such great need and responsibility. The loaves and fishes which the lad had provided for his lunch were as nothing in the presence of five thousand men besides women and children. Well might Andrew exclaim: "What are we, among so many?" It is a good thing to realize our true needs that we may be driven to Christ who is able to supply them.

3. To teach them their sufficiency in the face of the need. Without him we can do nothing (John 15:5). Christians can no more carry on the Lord's work of themselves than a branch can bear fruit without the vine. The same supplies the life and strength for the production of fruit. Philip's arithmetic was of no use in the face of such need. He had to fall back upon the Lord Jesus who has all power.

III. Jesus' Method of Feeding the Five Thousand (vv. 10-13).

He refused to give thanks for the scant supply, thus teaching us that we should always bring our abilities and gifts to him that he might bless them to his use.

1. The Lord's part was to bless and break the bread, even to create the needed supply (v. 11). "The disciples could not perform this part. The same kind of bread was provided for all, rich and poor, young and old.

2. The disciples' part was to distribute that which he had blessed and consecrated (v. 11). This is true of the Christian worker today. We are not responsible for its distribution to all those who are hungry and perishing for the bread of life.

3. The people's part was to sit down and eat (v. 10). They had no part in the provision, neither in its distribution, but only to take from the hands of the disciples and eat that which the Lord had provided. This is exactly our situation. The people are responsible for taking and eating of the bread of life; that is, faith and obedience are required of them.

4. The superabundance of God's grace (v. 13). When all had eaten to the full, much was left. This shows that the gospel is ample for the salvation of the world.

IV. The Effect of This Miracle (v. 14).

They recognized him at once as the prophet who should come. They believed him for his works' sake.

V. Jesus, the Bread of Life (vv. 32-51).

1. Christ is to the soul what bread is to the body.

2. How to obtain this bread. It is by coming to Christ and believing on him.

3. The blessed issue of taking this bread:

a. The one who eats this bread shall never hunger or thirst.

b. He shall never die. The one who eats the bread of heaven, that is, the one who receives Jesus Christ, has eternal life.

SOME THOUGHTS

He who prays, rises from prayer a better man.

Unconfessed sin in the soul is like a bullet in the body.

Wonder why some people insist on spelling Christian with a small "c"?

The more a stone is wounded by the hand of the engraver, the greater beauty is produced.

How Old?

He doesn't look a day over fifty. And feels like forty.

At the age of 62.

That's the happy state of health and pep a man enjoys when he gives his vital organs a little stimulant!

When your system is stagnant and you feel sluggish, headachy, half-alive—don't waste money on "tonics" or "regulators" or similar patent medicines. Stimulate the liver and bowels. Use a famous physician's prescription every drug store keeps. Just ask them for Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepin.

This appetizing syrup is made from fresh laxative herbs, active senna, and pure pepin. One dose will clear up almost any case of headache, biliousness, constipation. But if you want to keep in fine shape, feel fit the year 'round, take a spoonful of Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepin every few days. You'll eat better, sleep better and feel better in every way. You will never need to take another laxative.

Give the children a little of this delicious syrup two or three times a week. A gentle, natural stimulant that makes them eat and keeps the bowels from clogging. And saves them from so many sick spells and colds.

Have a sound stomach, active liver and strong bowel muscles that expel every bit of waste and poison every day! Just keep a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepin on hand; take a stimulating spoonful every now and then. See if you don't feel new vigor in every tug. Syrup pepin isn't expensive.

Familiar With Economy of Every Other Kind

An irate citizen stormed the citadel of the Los Angeles board of supervisors the other day. He was all burnt up because some project or other that he had in mind had not been immediately adopted as a council happened to be the victim of his plaint.

Mr. Shaw took the trouble to point out some of the weaknesses in the visitor's scheme, cited a number of points which made it utterly impracticable and finally remarked:

"Of course, we always appreciate public interest such as you have displayed, but I believe you will be a greater help to us if you would study a little political economy."

"Well," sighed the visitor, "I suppose I might as well; I've studied every other kind."

Soil Not Needed
as Bed for Crops

The plant physiology department of the University of California has found it possible to discard soil as a bed for raising crops. Water may be used instead and the results are far more uniform and reliable, with bumper crops the rule.

The necessary elements of plant food are dissolved in shallow tanks of water wherein the plants are suspended. Drought then becomes a matter of no moment, as a small well will supply water for ten acres of cheap concrete tanks.

secure food in abundance without interference from weeds or weather, and they produce enormously. Cotton, rice, and wheat yield 25 per cent to 50 per cent increase over the normal for earth-grown, unfed plants. Tomatoes yield 40 per cent more than usual. Beets and carrots are ready for harvest 20 to 30 days sooner than is ordinary.

The whole process tends to increase production, shorten the time of harvest and turn out a superior quality of produce.—Ralph Aiken in the North American Review.

A man may have a good opinion of himself and deserve it.

It's common sense

Wise doctors all agree that your body needs Vitamin, it's common sense to see that you get them. Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil contains both Vitamins A and D in guaranteed potency. Vitamin A builds resistance to winter colds. Vitamin D aids growing children in the development of bones and teeth. This emulsion has no fatty flavor. Men and women find it a pleasant, palatable way of taking cod liver oil. Scott & Bowne, Bloomfield, N. J. Sales Representatives, Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Inc., New York.

Listen to the Scott & Bowne radio program "Adventuring with Scott's Emulsion" on Sunday night at 8:30 p. m. over the Columbia Coast-to-Coast Network.

HELLO, JEAN! COME SEE HOW LOVELY AND WHITE MY WASH IS. I TOOK YOUR ADVICE—I'M USING RINSO NOW.

So glad she changed to this "no-work" soap!

I simply can't get over it! I didn't scrub at all, Jean—nor boil either—yet look at this wash. Whiter I ever saw! I wish you had told me about Rinso long ago; I never knew that suds could make such a difference.

So easy on clothes!

Rinso really dirt—saves clothes from being scrubbed threadbare. Its suds are thick, lasting—even in hardest water. Rinso gives twice as much suds, cup for cup, as lightweight, puffed-up soaps.

Wonderful suds in washers, too; the makers of 40 famous washers recommend it. And how easy its rich suds make dishwashing! Get the BIG package.

I Did It Because

The Story of a Jealous Heart

By Fannie Hurst

(© 1932, McClure Newspaper Syndicate.) (WNU Service)

THESE are certain things so closely enmeshed within the complicated pattern and fiber of the human heart, that to even try to explain the more subtle and terrifying of human motives and emotions were worse than useless. So felt Howard Bennett as he sat forward on his chair, with the steel-looking beads of sweat hanging from his brow.

Who knows! Perhaps he should never have married. Perhaps that streak in his nature, destined to spoil his happiness from the first week of it, might have developed under any circumstances.

Ernest, sometimes trying to analyze his sickness, and it amounted to that, felt differently.

It, perchance, he had married a woman with whom he had been less passionately, less devastatingly in love than he had been with Elaine since the hour he laid eyes on her, it all would have been different.

How could one, he argued to himself in the bitter pangs of many a sleepless night, find one's more traveling salesman of a self married to the frailest, whitest, most lily-like creature imaginable, and not fairly burn, as a smelting furnace burns, with the jealous terror of losing her.

The fact that this lily of a girl, this almost naively adoring, patient and confiding wife of his harbored neither a stray eye nor a stray fancy, did not serve to mitigate the chronic torture that befell the luckless youth, as more and more the precious truth of her desirability impressed itself upon him during the first few years of their alliance.

To add to anguish, his role of traveling salesman took him from home four, six and eight weeks at a time, and it was borne in upon Bennett, during these same few years, that his equipment fitted him for practically no other kind of work. Once, indeed, he went so far as to resign his nine-year position with a wholesale firm and set about the perilous task of finding a position that did not take him from the home. After three months of one serious case of maladjustment after another, it was a chastened young husband who sought, and obtained, the old position, which owing to secret and utterly unjustified rages of jealousy over his wife, he had resigned.

After that, realizing that his fears and suspicions amounted to insanity, and that his ceaseless jealous carping were wearing down even the sweet and gentle resistance of his wife, there was a pronounced improvement in the manner and attitude of Bennett. He no longer reproached her for the slightest wandering of her glance if they happened to be walking together on the street; ceased dropping in from his trips, one, two and three days before he had announced himself due, and for a while it seemed to the luckless Elaine that now, at last, she had got her marriage on some kind of an even keel.

But slowly, surely, like a heat creeping up on its prey, there crept back into the heart of Bennett, while traveling, the old terrors and suspicions concerning his wife.

She was so fair. She was so infinitely desirable. She was so over and above any qualities that existed in any woman he had ever known. Naturally, men would covet her. Why not? She was something to be coveted. She was something worth coveting! And last, all her goodness and sweet patience to the contrary notwithstanding, she was only human.

And so there overshadowed the household, torment and fear and all the ugly anguish that follows in the wake of jealousy.

With her lovely blue eyes that had already cried more than their share, imploring sanity of her husband, it sometimes seemed to him, holding her closely after one of his tantrums over a trifling nothing and imploring to be forgiven, that the only way out of his dilemma of fear concerning this darling of his life-time, was death. Death for them both. Then he could be sure of only them.

There were so many possibilities for losing her. He was away at least six months of his year. Before her marriage Elaine had been courted and sought more than any girl in her set. God knows, he used to ask of himself, why she chose him. It must have been his adoration, his mad blinding adoration, that drew her.

There had been many a heart ache over this marriage. Bennett could have counted them off on his ten fingers. Even the rector of her church, talented, young, sought after, the type of man who "had everything," had no pretensions, been in love with Elaine when she was and eloped with Bennett.

Elaine, who "had everything," could in turn have had Dr. Bradford Looze who "had everything" and miracle of miracles, she had married Bennett.

Well, when a man had a bequest like that, Bennett was apt to argue with himself, it made a maniac of him. It was like owning a jewel with no vault, casket, or case strong enough to protect it.

And strangely, adding fuel to this secret fire within Bennett, the only source of solace in these terrible years of the realization of her husband's folly lay in the quiet sympathetic moments she could manage to spend with her rector.

Dr. Bradford Looze, who since the marriage of Elaine and Bennett had become engaged to a now adored girl who was finishing a final year's missionary work in China before coming home to her marriage, seemed to realize better than anyone else, the quality of anguish that resided in the heart of Elaine, and at the same time to have a sympathetic understanding for the plight of her husband.

"I think I'll have to leave him, Bradford," she cried to him over and over again, as time after time the fires of jealousy had raged and burned in the household. "I can't stand it. I love him. I'm truer than true to him, and in his heart he knows it, but he's killing me, Bradford. Killing me."

"God and time will work their miracle, Elaine. There is not evil in Howard's heart. Only weakness and doubt."

That was true. And true also was the fact that deep in that twisted, forlorn heart of his Bennett knew his wife to be innocent; innocent of the suspicion he came more and more to harbor, that between her and Bradford old fires were rekindling.

He knew her to be innocent with his mind and with his heart he burned and hurt and raged and flayed.

Time after time, coming home according to his old ruse a few days before scheduled, there occurred in his household, because he had found her in the innocent company of this or that person, or in innocent tasks pertaining to this or that relationship, scenes too shameful to bear telling, and time after time she had crouched beside her rector, begging him for strength to go on, and time after time, out of the wide sympathetic understanding for both of them, Bradford had given her that strength.

It was on the occasion of one of the unexpected homecomings that, standing on her knees beside Bradford in the library of their home, without a second's hesitation, Bennett reached for his hip pocket and fired.

Sitting there in the witness chair, the steel beads of sweat out all over him, and trying to begin to explain to the judge, why he had committed the heinous crime of killing his wife and her rector, suddenly Bennett knew the futility of the attempt.

There are certain things so closely enmeshed within the complicated pattern of the human heart, that to even try to explain the more subtle and terrifying of human motives and emotions were worse than useless.

Always Springtime in Quito, on the Equator

The suburbs of Quito, the capital of Ecuador, nearly touch the equator, but its 100,000 inhabitants enjoy perpetual springtime, says a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

The city nestles in a bowl-shaped depression nearly two miles high among the Andean peaks. Snow-capped mountains are visible from the streets. Before the completion of the Quito-Guayaquil railroad, connecting the capital with Ecuador's principal gateway and port, Quito was isolated.

The few travelers that visited the city trekked for two weeks over difficult trails to reach Quito. Now, by rail, they may alight at the Quito depot the evening of the second day out of Guayaquil.

Many Indians make Quito their permanent residence; many come and go from the rural districts with the Quito sun. In the market place the bright shawls and ponchos of the natives add color to the piles of fruit and vegetables, homemade dolls and dyed cloth. Some of the bronze-skinned visitors, particularly those who specialize in selling blankets, prefer the streets to those of their merchandise. Nearly all of them wear Panama hats because Ecuador is the home of Panama hats.

In nearly three centuries that the Spanish ruled Ecuador they saturated the capital city with their customs. The principal square, Plaza Mayor, is laid out in Spanish style with a Spanish government building facing it. Here, and there, throughout the city, ornate facades of Spanish churches rise above the roof tops. The narrow cobbled streets, flanked by white, red-roofed houses with balconied upper stories, recall streets of cities in Spain.

Justifiable Homicide

The Summer Cottage, who had been at the shore since May, closed the cottage for the season and stepped toward his car in which his family waited.

Suddenly he wheeled and fired a shot.

The Woman Year-Around Resident, standing on the porch of the cottage next door, uttered a sharp cry and fell dead, a bullet through her breast.

Police came and arrested the Summer Cottage, who made no resistance.

"Yes, I did it and it served her right," he said.

"But what was your provocation?" demanded the police.

"Plenty," snapped the man. "Just as we were leaving she came out and pulled that old ole about the loveliest vacation days coming in September and October."—Detroit Free Press.

Puff Sleeves in Versatile Mood

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

PUFF, puff, puff goes the modern sleeve. Most often the sleeves in the newest party and afternoon frocks make the gesture of a single puff at the top, which is quite early Victorian and ever so quaint and charming according to the lovely gown pictured.

This girlish velvet frock tells a fascinating story of the little and the big. It is an ideal dress for the college girl. It is chic for all informal occasions and may even be worn for evening, as it is quite the latest for party gowns to have tiny puffed sleeves. Thus a gown of sheer velvet, as is the model pictured, has the advantage of doing double duty. It is not only the lovely puff sleeves which intrigue for the new square neckline of the dainty lace yoke is likewise beguiling in this frock.

A puff or puffs are apt to locate anywhere on the sleeve, singly, doubly or in numbers as fancy may dictate. The little pan-and-ink sketches, grouped about the attractive velvet gown in the illustration, reveal a versatile fashioning of sleeves which make puffs their feature.

When two little puffs are set as the top of the sleeve, as sketched below to the right, then the effect suggests a Florentine painting of a medieval lady, especially if the gown which it distinguishes be made of royal velvet or handsome brocade—all very formal and picturesque.

However, all sorts of puffed treatments are depicted in the outline drawings herewith, from formal to informal, some showing intricate workmanship. The elaborate sleeve with its series of puffs arranged row and row at the bottom of the sleeve, as delineated in the oval, shows a characteristic trend where self-fabric is ingeniously worked as in the instance of many of the handsome velvet evening coats which have no other trimming save their own material, which has been extravagantly puffed and shirred.

In the latest dresses there is a general tendency to emphasize width at the shoulders. The sleeve with a puff plays an important part in this movement. In this connection even the once popular leg-of-mutton sleeve has been revived by certain Paris designers of high standing.

Speaking of sleeves in general, not for years have they been so capricious. Their eccentricities are the more accentuated in that frequently the rest of the gown is severely plain, a highly ornamental note being sounded in the sleeves only. One notes this tendency especially in the simple evening gown of velvet or satin preferably, which has a deep-cut armhole, the short sleeve being of spangled cotton or some other sheer material, which accentuates with sparkling embroidery.

Sleeves in many a modish afternoon gown call attention unto themselves in that they are made of an entirely different material than that of the dress proper. That is the sleeves may be of lace or richly embroidered effects, or that which is especially favored, sheer metal weaves.

The fur-trimmed sleeve continues to be a theme of interest. The evening or afternoon gown of sheer fabric with a jacket or a bolero usually displays a hand of fur on the short or long flowing sleeve as the case may be. Fur-trimmed material also borders many sleeves. Sometimes these ruchings are formed of flowers.

Another Abduction

The deconstruction of man is the cause of the breakdown of the American home, says some one. You are right; a man said it.—Los Angeles Times.

THREE TYPES OF SLEEVES ON VIEW

There are three types of sleeves on daytime frocks that stand out from the general mass, as it were—the halting sleeves, tight between wrist and elbow or a little higher; the rather loose, straight sleeve which is attached to a wide shoulder yoke that ends midway between shoulder and elbow, and the peasant-puffed sleeve, with the puff over the elbow, and tight above and below this. Coats, of course, don't have puffed sleeves, but they do interesting things with fur just the same. Sometimes the sleeve is fur from wrist to elbow, or else from elbow to shoulder—and the very smartest and newest are entirely fur!

And shoulders? These are dropped-shoulder effects, given by wide shoulder yokes; kimono style, or raglan. They are roomy and generally square. And though there is an occasional sloping shoulder, it, too, is comfortably roomy.

Velveteen an Effective Complement to Woolens

The vogue of woolens has done much toward stimulating interest in velveteens. The French couture continues to advocate the alliance of velveteen coat or jacket with a woolen dress. One dreamer in the fashioning of these with wool most frocks. South-orn resort and cruise fashion show-ness also indicate a continued sponsorship of this fabric combination, and one finds dark or high colored velveteens accompanying white or pastel lightweight woolens.

Black and Red

This may color combination is featured in an evening gown which first saw the light of day in Paris. It is of black velvet, long and silky with inserts of coral red velvet set in under the armholes.

MANY BUTTONS

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Ocean pearl buttons of matching color or serve as a practical fastening at the same time that they ornament this tailored blouse of Algerian yellow silk. The suit is of brown tweed cut in red fox. The new midwinter and resort collections stress the importance of buttons. Pretty effects are achieved in that many of the new buttons are very colorful and are made to enter into the color scheme of the costume.

MONEY TO BURN

By Peter B. Kyne

THE STORY

Hiram Butterworth, miser, decides to leave his fortune to Elmer Clarke, a poor young nephew. He tells Absalom McPeake, his lawyer, of a deal forty years ago in which he swindled a man out of $40,000, and arranged for payment with interest. Through a gossiping telegraph operator the town of Pilarcitos hears of Elmer's fortune before he does. Nellie Cathcart, Elmer's sweetheart, tells him his inheritance is more than a million. "Colorado Charley" and his partner, Mae, decide to pluck Elmer. Nellie insists that Elmer see mind of the world before their marriage. Unknown to Elmer, Nellie is halves of the man Butterworth swindled.

CHAPTER V—Continued

She sat down at her typewriter and rattled off a letter of thanks to Absalom McPeake. Incidentally she informed him that her mother had been dead five years and seven months and that her estate had never been probated, for two very sufficient reasons. One, because she had nothing to probate, and two, because she had taken the precaution some two years before her demise from a lingering illness formally to give, assign, transfer and set over unto her daughter, Nellie Cathcart, all of the right, title and interest which she had in that certain mortgage and deficiency judgment, et cetera. Nellie opined that the statute of limitations in her case was in perfect working order and that even the wolves at Washington could not, by any possible interpretation of the federal income tax or federal inheritance tax laws, construe a gift as an inheritance under a will.

Nellie now figured the interest at 8 per cent annually, compounded semi-annually, on $40,000 from August 10, 1882, to August 10, 1924. Having completed her computations, she was aware that in forty-two years her mother's gift had grown to be worth—oh, masterpiece of manipulation—exactly $1,078,000.

The author of this tale has figured his sum twice, so he knows the figures are correct. Nellie knew that her figures were not the product of a disordered imagination; she knew that if Hiram Butterworth's estate came at all, it would be hers. It would, under the definite terms of the will, have to pay her. There was room for neither legal quibble nor compromise.

Upon completing her computation Nellie went into the vault, ostensibly to put her cash away, but in reality to shed a few briny tears of sympathy for Elmer Butterworth Clarke. Presumably she had backed up and her practical mind leaped to the problem of ascertaining approximately the sum that a rapacious and predatory government would bite out of Elmer's share of the estate. When she had made a fairly accurate if rough estimate of this, she wept again. Upon recovering her emotions she deducted a further sum which might reasonably include the funeral expenses of Uncle Hiram, the probate fees, the appraiser's fees and executor's fee, the specific bequest of ten thousand dollars, state and county taxes and ordinary debts of the estate. She was still further appalled at this total and wept a third time.

"Poor Elmer!" she sobbed. "To think that he was shot twice and gassed once fighting for his country, and now look what his country does to him! Oh, darling, darling, your poor dear head is going to be all bloody, but if you'll only keep it unbowed, how much more your sweetheart is going to love you!"

Before she emerged from the vault she remembered the joke which fate, in her case, had played on the wolves of Washington. She at least was going to get $1,078,000 out of the wreck and the howls of the wolves would be sweet music to her ears. They couldn't touch her with a buggy whip—what did Nellie Cathcart care? When the tumult and the shouting died, when the smoke of battle drifted from the scene, it would reveal Little Faithful, smiling, happy and confident, the possessor of Elmer Clarke and a bank roll that a greyhound couldn't jump over.

CHAPTER VI

Meanwhile Elmer Clarke's final period of service at the Smoke Shoppe was drawing to a close. During that two weeks one incident alone upbraided itself in Elmer's consciousness as a pleasant variation from the orderly procession of morning, noon and night.

On the third day following the great news, the editor of the Clarion fathomed a thought truly bucolic. Remorse for the light manner in which he had once offended Elmer Clarke in his local brevities column now overtook him. What if Elmer should take a notion to back some smart metropolitan journalist in a new Pilarcitos paper and run the Clarion out of business? Horrified! A vacancy occurring on the board of trustees of the Union high school at this time, the Clarion came out with an editorial blast in local brevities with a three-column head, suggesting the election to the board of that sterling and distinguished citizen, Elmer Butterworth Clarke. The proponents of another candidate to the office, which was without salary, promptly pointed out the inadvisability of shattering an ancient and well-established custom of electing to the school board only those men and women who had demonstrated their fitness to superintend the education of the young by providing the community with young to educate.

In an indefinite and roundabout way Elmer sensed a covert slam in this. At any rate it aroused all of his new-born antagonism to provincialism. Exposed on by his friends, he decided to demonstrate to Pilarcitos that a young, unmarried man should, and would, function on that board or know the reason why. Immediately he announced himself as a candidate for the office.

Nellie was delighted, because this evidenced on Elmer's part a subconscious decision to continue to live in Pilarcitos and grow up with the town. She advised him to conduct a furious campaign against the mossbacks of the office.

Oh, Masterpiece of Manipulation!—Exactly $1,078,000.

the community, to prove that he had its interests at heart as true as did his opponent, Henry Tichenor, who was the father of twelve children. Indeed, in the midst of her subtle blandishments she suddenly conceived the idea of making Elmer the leading citizen of the county, if not of the state.

In one illuminating instant she caught a vision of the caused her Elmer's place, she knew her man couldn't be elected town dog catcher, but as president of the Pilarcitos Commercial Trust and Savings bank she could elect him mayor at the primary election. From mayor to the state legislature, from the state legislature to lieutenant governor, from that to governor, to congressman, to United States senator, to the Vice Presidency—to the White House!

"It's a big dream," she reflected, "but only those who have the ability to dream big dreams ever amount to anything. Just as easy to dream big dreams as little ones—and Ansel P. Moody has battered on this community long enough. Elmer is right. He's a pawnbroker, not a banker, and a banker should be the big man in any community. He should know better than any other man its needs, its aspirations and his duty toward it. When the time comes I'll tell Ansel P. Moody where he gets off. He'll sell his controlling interest in that bank to me at a fair price, or I'll start a new bank and run him and his competitor out of business in ten years."

With difficulty she repressed a cheer. "I'll open my bank with a hundred thousand dollars capital, fully paid up. I'll start with my own deposit of at least four hundred thousand dollars and I'll become a member of the Federal Reserve bank, which no banker in this town has seen enough to become. I'll take over every loan Ansel Moody has as it falls due. I'll cut the interest rate on those two bloodsuckers and I'll lend money on honesty, ability and industry; in the long run I'll consolidate the other two banks in this town with mine—I mean Elmer's and mine. Oh, Elmer, darling, you're playing into my hand, and that means you'll wear out your life, not drag it out and rot it out! And nobody shall ever know who put up the money."

At their next meeting, after incalculating in Elmer such a sense of power as he had never known before, Nellie humbly shifted the conversation to subject which is scrumptious more than pleasant to nine men out of ten, to wit, himself.

"Dearie," she charged suddenly, "do you know that suit you're wearing is beginning to look just a little bit shabby? I don't like to see my Elmer let himself go like this. You should be the best dressed man in town—and usually you are. I'm afraid you've been trying too hard to save money to equip Elmer's place."

He squeezed her hand gratefully. "The idea of that business of my own obsessed me, Nellie," he admitted. "I have been scheming more than usual lately. I wanted to get going—to be independent and make enough money to enable me to marry you and give you everything you desired."

"But darling—I would have married you on far less. I would have been a help to you, not a source of expense."

"I know it, old love. But you were doing as well in your job as I was doing in mine, and it isn't a particularly striking evidence of unselfishness when a man asks a woman to give up financial independence to scrimp and save and sacrifice with him. I didn't want you to do that. My mother had to do that all her life and it hurt me. I swore that when I married, my wife should never have a dollar and a half to pay the gas bill or Elmer, I'd like eight dollars to buy a new hat."

"Nellie, that sort of thing is disgraceful. I want you to have your own private checking account and I never want to know what you do with the money."

Nellie now squeezed his hand. "Never fear, Elmer, I'll have my own checking account and nobody shall ever know what I do with the money. I agree with you thoroughly there. But Elmer, we're off our subject. I want you to go up to San Francisco and get yourself a complete wardrobe. You must take a vacation, Elmer."

"I will—if you'll take it with me." "I shall not. On a vacation I'd be a nuisance. You'd be working hard just trying to assure yourself that your wife was having a wonderful time—and I'm not ready to marry you yet, dear. Really, you must not bother yourself with a wife and her trunks and bags, not to mention your own."

"Sure you can't be persuaded to change your mind and marry me before I go, Nellie?"

"Elmer Clarke, I'm not even engaged to you yet. Remember that. I have already explained to you why. He surrendered. "You're a mean woman, but I love you, so I suppose all of my life I'll be giving you your own way about everything. The only comfort I'll draw out of this will be the knowledge that you're wiser than a tree full of coals and probably know more about everything than I do."

"Omit the compliments, Mr. Clarke, please. Are you going on that vacation?"

"Yes—after I've cleaned up Henry Tichenor in this school election. By the way, Nellie, I've made one new resolution, since that lawyer, McPeake, wired me I was a millionaire. I've decided not to cook my own breakfast hereafter and to refrain from eating my luncheons and dinners in restaurants. I've engaged a smart gentleman of color to look after me and the dogs. His name is Jasper and he swears a mean skillet; he can bottle, drive a car and play the banjo."

"Good! Elmer, I think you ought to buy yourself another nice present. You've been good for ever so long and you deserve it. You'll want a new house, of course, if you intend to remain in Pilarcitos long enough to complete your term of office as chairman and member of the board of trustees of the Union high school. What do you want for your bungalow and lot?"

"Ten thousand dollars. Got a customer for me, Nellie?"

"Yes, but I'm afraid my customer cannot meet your terms. I know a party who might be induced to buy your house if you will accept two thousand dollars down, with a first mortgage for two years on the remainder at seven per cent."

"Sold!" The word popped out of Elmer's mouth in answer to the man's offer. He was so glad to get rid of his house that he didn't even ask for the money.

"Not from you," she replied breathlessly. They were laughing at the time in a booth at the Palace grill. Nellie glanced around, saw that for the moment they were unobserved.

"Kiss me!" she commanded fiercely. Elmer dutifully obeyed. "Now go forth and make your fight for school trustee," Nellie ordered. "See to it that you win. If you're defeated I'll cry."

"John Bull," Englishman, Depicted by Scotsman

It was not the English, but a Scot who first fastened on the English people the name of John Bull. The man who achieved this feat was a favored physician in ordinary to good Queen Anna, a personal friend of the queen's chief minister, the familiar associate of Swift and Pope. His name was John Arbuthnot, and he wrote, in 1719, "with exquisite humor and ingenuity," "The History of John Bull."

A mere political tract, whatever its value at the moment, does not usually outlast its little day. Arbuthnot was writing chiefly in earnest support of the Tory policy of peace with France, and an end to the long and costly war of the Spanish succession. The more playful portions of his book had to do with the negotiations leading to the parliamentary union of England and Scotland. In the former he brings out the character of John Bull; in the latter with equal good humor, and perhaps a touch of gentle malice, he delineated the Scottish character—Vancouver Province.

Variety of Bananas

To most of us a banana is a banana. Some wiser persons remember bananas, but it will be a revelation to many to know that there are nearly 100 varieties of this fruit. The Philippine islands are responsible for 67, Malaya, 18; Spain, 10, and Burma, 4.

with one stone. He resolved to go fishing. En route to the stream and back he planned to visit half a dozen farmers and solicit their support at the coming school election.

He received assurances of support from every voter upon whom he called, and four out of the six expressed profound satisfaction at this signal evidence of Elmer's intention, despite his recently acquired million, to remain in Pilarcitos, take an active interest in civic affairs and grow up with the county. In fact, one of them went so far as to hit him a hearty swat on the back and say: "Elmer, you're all right. No swelled head about you. I'm for you all the way! You're just plain folks like the rest of us and your money hasn't spoiled you a mite."

The accolade brought on a coughing fit, but Elmer did not mind. He was beginning to discover, in these piping times of peace, the true inwardness of something he had gone to war to fight for, and that was the gentle art of making the world safe for democracy. In that moment he caught a glimpse of the class consciousness and class resentment, sleeping perhaps but never dead, even in a free republic. He knew he must be careful not to appear any different hereafter from what he had always been; that jealous minds in back of keen eyes would be quick to attribute to him now the ideals and impulses which would be their own did they but stand in his shoes.

He was thoughtful and subdued as he drove into his garage late that evening.

His newly acquired person of color, Jasper, came out of the kitchen and met Elmer as the latter was locking the garage door.

"Dey's a young lady waitin' foh you, suh, in de parlor," he confided. "She dese call about foh o'clock an' when I told her you-all had gone fishin' she said she'd set aroun' an' wait twell you got back."

"Who is she, Jasper?"

Jasper handed him a card, which read: Miss Doris Gatewood, Special Correspondent, The American Weekly, New York City, 215 Rampart Boulevard, Los Angeles, Calif., Telephone 661-578.

"Oh, Lord!" Elmer groaned. "She's still new! What sort of person is she, Jasper?"

Jasper grinned. "Shanah ain't hard to look at, Miahah Clarke."

"Well, you tell the lady I have just returned and will see her as soon as I have had an opportunity to clean up." Some ten minutes later, when Elmer entered his little parlor, in which no woman had sat since his mother's funeral, he found Miss Doris Gatewood seated at the ancient square table, busily playing a Strauss waltz, piano softly playing a Strauss waltz, on the revolving stool and advanced to greet him with outstretched hand and a shy, embarrassed smile. There was about her a charming combination of frankness and shyness which quite robbed the friendliness of her glance, her smile and her hand shake of a faint note of boldness.

Elmer, who was hypersensitive to first impressions, noted all this and told himself it was, perhaps, characteristic of lady correspondents. He had gathered an impression from his reading that all writers were a bit jolly, unconventional and bohemian. "So kind to meet you, Mr. Clarke," the girl announced. Her deep, mellifluous tones seemed to reverberate in the room and challenge the dying voice of the last note she had struck on Elmer's old piano. "I am Doris Gatewood."

Elmer bowed over the outstretched hand. "Jasper gave me your card, Miss Gatewood; consequently I can guess the reason for your call. Please be seated." He indicated a horsehair sofa and sat down opposite. "I'm sorry you've had to wait so long for me."

"Oh, I haven't been a bit lonely, Mr. Clarke! I've been playing with your fox terrier, and when he ran away I played the piano. I found some books and I've been reading also."

"You did quite right to make yourself at home, Miss Gatewood."

People of the World
The present population of the world is approximately 1,900,000,000. Estimates of world population before 1880 are not very trustworthy. Sir George Knibbs, however, considers that Micheli's estimate of 1,000,000,000 for 1845 is as well founded a guess as can be made. Accepting this estimate, it can be calculated that between 1845 and 1914 the average annual increase of the world population was 7 per cent. It was, in other words, increasing at a rate which would double the population in less than 100 years.

Salvaging Mail Matter

A great many letters would reach the dead letter offices if there were no postal directory service. How effectively this service performs its task is seen in the fact that during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1925, only 29,070,019 undeliverable letters were received in all the dead letter offices in the country—a fact to which the postmaster general points with considerable pride. Considering the billions of letters that are handled by the post office each year—the New York post office alone delivers 17,000,000 letters every day—the dead letter office figures seem slender, indeed.

FOR NERVOUSNESS AND HEADACHES

Danville, Ill.—"I experienced a nervous breakdown and suffered severely with my back and head. I tried a great many remedies but nothing did me any good, said Mrs. Mary Connelly of 922 N. ## Dr. Pierce's Prescription

Wisconsin's Timber

Wisconsin's first forest planter was a Vermont named Walter Ware. In 1880 he planted white pines in the neighborhood of Hancock. Today this planting is worth from $900 to $1,200 an acre, according to the department of agriculture and markets. In 1876 Ware planted 1,570 trees in recognition of the Philadelphia centennial. Out of that planting approximately 1,500 trees are still alive. The trees are 60 feet tall and average 11 inches or more in diameter. It will cut nearly 20,000 board feet of timber to the acre.

Large Income

A recent estimate of the number of persons worth $1,000,000 or more as shown by their paying tax on income of $50,000 and upward was 14,900. In 1925 it was reported that there were 207 persons paying tax on incomes of $1,000,000 and more, including seven who paid on incomes of $5,000,000 or over, nine who paid on incomes between $3,000,000 and $4,000,000 and 29 who paid on incomes between $2,000,000 and $3,000,000.

A Sketch of Washington

On February 22, 1732, in an old-fashioned Virginia farm house, near the Potomac River, was born one who was destined to play a large part in the history of the country. This one was George Washington. His childhood home was a house of four rooms on the ground floor, with an attic of long sloping roofs and an enormous brick chimney at each end.

When George was seven years old, the family moved to a large plantation on the banks of the Rappahannock River. Here he was sent to a small school taught by a man named Hobby, a sexton of the church and a tenant of George's father. George learned a little reading, a little writing, and a little ciphering. Later in life he became a fairly good penman, but he never became a good speller.

When George was eleven years old, his father died, thus his home training fell to his mother; but he was fortunate indeed for his mother was kind, firm and practical.

Following the custom of the times, the brother, Lawrence was sent to an excellent school in Your home is your Castle—Your bank your guard

The life of your family—its hopes, fortunes, activities—centers around your home. In many ways your bank is its guardian. When your home was merely a plan—a desire—the bank helped you, through savings and loans, to attain it. Your bank enables you to pay taxes, expenses for repairs—all the costs of its maintenance—easily, surely, without hardship. In the safe-keeping of your reserves—as a trustee for your estate—your bank assures the security and safety of your home and family. At every vulnerable point in the financial fence surrounding your home—your bank protects and guards.

BILL TO PROHIBIT GOVERNMENT PRINTING ENVELOPES

Congressman David Hogg, of Fort Wayne, has introduced a bill in congress providing that after December 31, 1932, the government shall not manufacture for sale, or to be manufactured for sale or sell any stamped envelopes containing any lithographing, printing or advertisement, except the request to return printed in the upper left corner of the envelope. Such request to return shall contain only the words "after ... days return to" and two blank lines to which may be added the name of the postoffice or branch postoffice. The measure was referred to the house committee on the postoffice and post roads.

TO FORECLOSE MORTGAGE ON ST. JOE PROPERTY

M. C. Blue, in a complaint filed in the DeKalb circuit court by Atkinson & Husselman, says that on October 8, 1924, S. S. Widney executed a note to James P. Buckingham for $100, payable in three years and secured by mortgage on real estate. The property was afterwards conveyed to Charles and Pearl Cochran. A judgment for the amount due, together with interest and attorneys' fees and foreclosure of the mortgage, is demanded.

SCHOOL MONEY NOW BEING DISTRIBUTED

The common school revenue and the congressional school fund interest has been distributed to the school units of DeKalb county by County Auditor Frank E. Lyon.

The distribution is made semi-annually. The amount of the common school revenue paid out at this time is $10,510.60 and that of congressional school fund interest is $544.85. The number of children in the county according to the enumeration is 6,701 and the per capita distribution is slightly less than $1.65.

The amount of the payments to the various units of the county follow:

Waterloo, $455.35; Auburn, $1,968.23; Butler city, $590.64; Garrett, $2,134.87.
Butler township, $346.46; Concord, $440.50; Fairfield, $440.50; Franklin, $481.76; Grant, $168.28; Jackson, $501.55; Keyser, $668.18; Newville, $224.38; Richland, $359.66; Smithfield, $671.48; Spencer, $292.02; Stafford, $158.38; Troy, $179.88; Union, $508.19; Wilmington, $470.20.

NO SHADOW FOR GROUND HOG

The ground hog poked his nose from his subterranean retreat Tuesday, his eyes fixed furtively on the snowy surface of the earth. Gray skies. Ah, no shadow! Out he came. Skies lowered and the weather man saw a possibility of a light mist. And the day continued that way, tradition says, our woodchuck friend promises mild weather. And an early spring.

HOW AN ACRE BEGAN

An acre was reckoned in England as the amount of land that a yoke of oxen could plow in a day, until the establishment of a definite measure by the laws of the thirteenth century and later. Larger units of power and the development of new hopes have eliminated the significance of the early meaning of this word.

HOW TO MAKE BUSINESS

Two Bryan business men illustrated what $3 will do in making business.

One man donated the money to another who spent it to purchase an article from the store. This store then made a $3 purchase from another, and this was continued until 59 sales had been made, or a total of $177 in business. The articles purchased are on display in a store window and the original $3 was given to charity.

Swede Was Discoverer of Northeast Passage

Adolf Erik Nordenskjöld was a Swedish navigator, born, however, in Finland. He was the discoverer of the long-sought northeast passage, in 1879.

His vessel, the steamship Vega, left Gothenburg, Sweden, July 4, 1879, passed through Jugar strait August 1, crossed the sea of Kara, and anchored August 6 in Dickson's harbor. The explorers landed and took observations on Northeast Cape August 19, and the next day weighed anchor again and sailed eastward, passing the mouth of the River Lena August 27. About a month later the ship was frozen in, in latitude 67 degrees 7 minutes north, longitude 173 degrees 30 minutes, about three-quarters of a mile from the Siberian mainland. The crew went ashore, made friends with the natives, a then little known tribe, and spent nine months waiting for the ice to melt and their ship.

On July 18, 1879, the Vega once more weighed anchor, and continued her journey. On July 20 she passed through Bering strait, the first vessel to pass from Atlantic to Pacific north of the Eurasian continent. She reached Yokohama September 2, 1879. For his exploit, Nordenskjöld was made a baron. He died in 1901.

Washington Shown as Master of Light Humor

One of General Washington's most graceful bits of humor crops out in a letter he wrote in 1779, inviting several ladies to dine at his table. To prepare them for the Spartan fare they might have to face, he wrote: "Since our arrival at this happy spot, we have had a ham (sometimes a shoulder) of Bacon, to grace the head of the Table; a piece of roast Beef adorns the foot; a dish of beans, or greens, (almost imperceptible) decorates the center. When the cook has a mind to cut a figure, (which I presume will be the case tomorrow), we have two Beefsteak pyes, or dishes of crabs, in addition, one on each side of the center dish, dividing the space & reducing the distance between dish & dish to about 6 feet, which without them would be near 12 feet apart. Of late he has had the surprising sagacity to discover, that apples will make pyes; and it is a question, if, in the violence of his efforts, we do not get one of apples, instead of having both of Beefsteaks. If the ladies can put up with such entertainment, and will submit to partake of it in plates, once Tin but now Iron—(not become so by the labor of scouring), I shall be happy to see them."

First "Medal of Honor"

The first Congressional medal of honor was awarded to Capt. Thomas Truxton on March 29, 1890. On March 17 in that year Mr. Parker observed in the house of representatives that information had been received of a very gallant action having occurred between a frigate of the United States of 38 guns, commanded by Commodore Truxton, and a French vessel of 52 guns. He stated that it was not usual to grant emoluments on account of any past gallant action to our officers, but that it was common and consistent to grant approbation. He also stated that in other countries monuments were erected in cases of this kind. As already indicated, congress approved of his suggestions and the medal was awarded.

Feeding for That High Hatchability

(By Prof. Paul G. Riley)

When the Experiment Station, the observing, practical poultrymen, and the highly interested commercial hatcheries agree on certain factors that control hatchability the points on which they agree must be accepted as facts. To date there have been three factors or facts that are agreed on by the three groups mentioned above. These factors are:

1. Sunshine, not filtered through window glass, or a heavy coating of dust on some of the commercial products, which lets the ultra violet light into the chicken house, or cod liver oil.

2. A plentiful supply of green leafy material, such as alfalfa, clover, soy bean, or blue grass leaves.

3. A complete protein. Following a period when we have a lot of natural sunshine, hatches are usually good. Ordinarily during the winter months we strike a period when the amount of sunshine is limited. During this period cod liver oil should be fed to the breeding birds, at the rate of one pint of biologically

PAGEANT DREW A FULL HOUSE SUNDAY EVENING.

Beyond any doubt, the pageant "The Knight of the Holy Grail" was the most successful and impressive entertainment ever put on by the Methodist young people. Sunday evening at the local M. P. church. The event was in commemoration of the New Century movement in the Methodist denomination and designed as Educational day to be conducted by the young people.

The splendid audience was conclusive proof that the folks are interested in young people and those taking the responsibility of the production are happy for the interest of the public in their efforts.

* Plans are now under way for an Easter pageant on Sunday evening March 27, and the production will again be fostered by the young folks of the Sunday school.

TAKE IT EASY

If you have a long, hard journey ahead of you, take it easy. The longest journey can be traveled only one mile at a time. If your strength will permit you to travel one mile, you can probably travel a thousand, providing you do not wear yourself out thinking about it.

If you have a long, hard year ahead of you, take it easy. If you can live through one day with credit to yourself and satisfaction to those around you, you probably can live through three hundred and sixty-five days in the same manner, if you don't use up too much of your energy in being sorry for yourself.

If you have a long, hard task ahead of you, take it easy. Don't worry and fret yourself sick over difficulties that are days, weeks, or months ahead. You can't do anything about them now, and worry only lessens your efficiency, cuts down your reserve strength. All you can possibly do today is today's task.

Remember to take one mile at a time, one day at a time, one task at a time. It is only when this is forgotten, and you try to travel all the miles at once, live all the days at once, or do all the tasks at once, that you are in danger of sinking under the load, distraught, nerve-wracked, crushed by the weight of an intolerable burden.

Take it easy, but remember that taking it easy doesn't mean loafing on the job. It means using your head and keeping yourself master of circumstances, not allowing yourself to be their slave. It means doing the best you can without calling everyone's attention to your efforts. It means seeing things in their true proportions, without belittling others or unduly exalting yourself. It means cultivating a calm, sure faith in God, and in your ability to work with him.

Don't worry, fret, and fear.
Smile—and take it easy.

Dorothy's Mother
Proves Claim

Children don't ordinarily take to medicine but here's one that all of them love. Perhaps it shouldn't be called a medicine at all. It's more like a rich, concentrated food. It's pure, wholesome, sweet to the taste and sweet in your child's little stomach. It builds up and strengthens weak, puny, underweight children, makes them eat heartily, brings the roses back to their cheeks, makes them playful, energetic, full of life. And no bilious, headachy, constipated, feverish, fretful baby or child ever failed to respond to the gentle influence of California Fig Syrup on their little bowels. It starts lazy bowels quick, cleans them out thoroughly, tones and strengthens them so they continue to act normally, of their own accord.

Millions of mothers know about California Fig Syrup from experience. A Western mother, Mrs. J. G. Moore, 110 Cliff Ave., San Antonio, Texas, says: "California Fig Syrup is certainly all that's claimed for it. I have proved that with my little Dorothy. She was a bottle baby and very delicate. Her bowels were weak. I started her on Fig Syrup when she was a few months old and it regulated her, quick. I have used it with her ever since for colds and every little set-back and her wonderful condition tells better than words how it helps."

Don't be imposed on. See that the Fig Syrup you buy bears the name, "California" so you'll get the genuine, famous for 50 years.

The Last Laugh
As Eddie Cantor, the comedian, was standing in front of a theater where all seats had been sold, a little man and his wife were turned away, greatly disappointed. "Here," said Eddie, "I'll let you have a couple of my seats," and he gave the little man two tickets. Delighted, the man gave Eddie his card, saying, "Some day I hope I may be able to do something for you." The little man looked at the card. The little man was an undertaker. — Capper's Weekly.

The Dentist

Who Wanted to Be an Artist

By Fannie Hurst

IF ANYONE had asked Howard Masters why he took up dentistry as his profession, he would have answered quickly and somewhat bitterly: Because my grandfather, father, two brothers and a sister are dentists and the period of training was shorter and less expensive than that of most of the other professions.

No unsound reasons and yet lacking in every fundamental principle upon which, usually, the choice of a life work needs be founded.

In Howard's case, to his bitter realization, the fundamental principle, love for his work, was lacking. It was difficult to cross his family in its unanimous desire for his electing dentistry. His grandfather and father were about to retire, his two brothers had removed to remote western cities there to develop practices and his sister, about to marry, was torn between continuing her profession or following the wish of her husband-to-be, that she retire.

It was therefore expected of Howard that he would go into dentistry, and keep alive, so to speak, the Masters' tradition in the Middle West city, where for generations there had been a Doctor Masters, D.D.S.

Well, Howard qualified all right as a student, profiting by the elders who were constantly at his elbow with help and advice during his term, and graduated, if not with high honors, at least with sufficiently good standing to start him off well in his practice.

Not only that, there was ready and waiting for Howard a certain clientele which would just naturally gravitate to a Masters. Certain of the old families of the town would let a tooth ache, rather than take it to anyone besides a Masters. As the grandfather and father said, it was impossible for either one of them to actually retire, until Howard got out his shingle. The town insisted upon a Masters for a dentist.

Strangely, the first year was not so bad. There were so many side issues to divert. First the new office to be furnished, with all the modern and expensive appliances which the older Masters had managed to forego.

Then, the novelty of putting into practice the theoretical information he had achieved in classroom and laboratory and half-applied in his clinical work and as apprentice in the office of an older dentist.

The new dentistry with its growing relationship to medical science and the various aspects of oral surgery, presented, during the first year, interesting vistas of experimentation and research.

Then one day a slip of a girl from one of the town's newer families, whose right molar he happened to be filling, looked up at him between sessions of grinding, and said: "How in the world would a man ever choose to be a dentist?" And off-hand Howard began to realize to what extent that same question was pushing against his consciousness.

How in the world did he, Howard Masters, whose fingers itched to paint and the secret corners of whose room were jammed with oils and water-colors due at odd moments between dental lectures and clinical sessions, ever choose to be a dentist? As a matter of fact, it came surging over him in a slow sort of anger, he hadn't. It had been planned, thought, decided for him, and he, non-resistant, had allowed a half-senile grandfather and a father accustomed to rule to carve out his destiny as if it had been so much soapstone.

And what sort of a destiny? The destiny of a dentist! A filler of molars. An engineer of small mouth bridges and false plates for the toothless. He, Howard Masters, with the soul of an artist, grinding, filling, bridging, and crowning his days away. Realization, like an avalanche set in motion by the pebble of a slip of a girl's remark, began to roll in thunder into the mind of Howard, awakening him to the enormity of his discontent; filling him with a kind of humiliation, causing him to openly loathe his profession.

Thus it was that very early in his career, the first 18 months to be exact, lassitude and an indifference that were nothing short of appalling to his parent and grandparent, began to lay hold of Howard. Appointments he regarded with none of the rigid observance demanded of his profession, bridge work, because he despised its intricacies, he did in a loose, slipshod fashion, and on one occasion, when an old and revered patient of his grandfather's came to him requesting to have his teeth cleaned, Howard flatly told him his repugnance for such work, and sent him to a rival classmate who had hung up a shingle opposite.

Of course the result was inevitable, but it came none too soon to suit Howard. Within a six-month, to the consternation of his family and his own secret satisfaction, his office, so far as business was concerned, was dead as the proverbial doornail, and stacked against his fine new apparatus was canvas after canvas, testifying to the leisure hours he had spent in his office that were applied to activities other than dentistry.

The upshot of it all was that after a year and a half, with one hundred dollars in his pocket, the lightest heart he had ever known, and the reluctant blessings of his family on his face, young Masters turned his back toward a certain remote art colony on the Pacific coast, there to take up the work that lay closest to his heart, water-color and oil-painting.

Verdun-By-The-Sea turned out to be all he dreamed it would be. Crags closed in, the Pacific rolled up to its curving coastline like a lazy blue tongue, cottages nestled in the pale sands, and for a pittance, the young artist could rent himself a studio along the straggling bit of Main street, where all day youths in flaring collars and no hats and girls in tams and flaring smocks hurried back and forth with canvas and camp chairs under their arms. A careless, improvident, picturesque little art colony, with tea rooms along its Main street called, Ye Tiny Shoppe, Ye Rembrandt Inn, Ye Mortar Board and a two-story building called the Auditorium, where a shaggy-haired, barefoot Hercules of a man called "Master" by the students, delivered lectures every morning and held classes in modeling during the afternoon.

It was all as in a dream to Howard who, released from the horrible arduousness of a profession that had repelled him, found himself, the very first day, attired in one of the open-collared shirts, duck trousers, sandals on bare feet treading on warm sands to a class in modelling presided over by the Master.

It was exhilarating beyond anything that had ever happened to him. The fact that the Masters, after six weeks had never so much as paused by his canvas except to mark it with a bit of red chalk, which meant "do it over," did little to damp his enthusiasm. Free, uninhibited, and according to the demands of Howard's heart, he lived this life among the students at Verdun-By-The-Sea, aping their care-free habits, learning their arty patter, relaxing the long evenings through, on the studio floors or over endless hours of discussion in Ye This, or the Ye That Tea room on the Main street.

Then one day, about his sixth month there, earning his precarious living by serving tea and scones at Ye Tiny Shoppe, he met a Miss Alicia Moore, of whom he had heard, daughter of the well-known artist Myron Trollope, who lived in a town called Briarcliff, ten miles away.

It was one of these immemorial cases of love at first sight. Alicia who was eighteen, slender, hobbled and forthright as a boy, western in bearing, and relentless in frankness, gave one look into the brown, responsive, rather frustrated eyes of Howard, and forthwith, as she said of herself, "fell."

The same applied to Howard to such an extent that precisely three days after he had served her tea and scones at Ye Tiny Shoppe, they were engaged, on prospects as slim as a tooth-pick looked fat.

Myron Trollope, particularly after one look at Howard's work, took a stand and remained adamant. The young people were entitled to one another, if they insisted, but Howard would have to establish his ability to make his girl a living, and somehow Trollope was inclined to think he could do so with his palette.

"I'm a graduate dentist," he told his beloved's father in a state of irate self-defense of his earning power. "I'm not like most of the artists around here, dependent only upon a palette and brush. I can pass any kind of state examinations tomorrow, and open dental offices in any town I want."

It seemed to Howard that the father of Alicia, Myron Trollope, the distinguished landscape painter, literally fell upon his neck.

"Good Lord, boy, these two towns of Briarcliff and Verdun-By-The-Sea have been begging for a dentist for the past five years. I've been preaching for exactly that long that the bright young fellow who puts a dentist's shingle out in these two towns can reap a young fortune. Can you have Alicia? You just bet as a D.D.S. you can have Alicia!"

It was that that another Masters used a brass plate as background for fame and fortune.

Release From Disease
Found in Common Sense

Release from contagious disease can be safe and yet be safe for those who will come in contact with the person previously ill. Since the notion of spontaneous generation of life has been exploded, precaution against disease has been comparatively simple. The greatest danger lies not in the bedding, books and magazines the patient has used, but in the patient himself. Fumigation is not necessary. A good soaping, airing and cleansing of articles in contact with the patient is sufficient. Apparent recovery of a patient, moreover, is not an indication of safety to others. The doctor's duty ends with the recovery of the patient; he has nothing to say about when the patient will be released. That duty is left to the health department in consideration of the welfare of the community. There is no mystery to release. Dr. W. W. Bauer emphasizes in the last of his series of articles in the Hygiene Magazine, "It is cheap. It requires only four ingredients: hot soapy water, sunbath fresh air, elbow grease and horse sense."

When Mother Sews for Little Folks

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

AND now the spring sewing campaign begins. As a rule, it's "children first" when mothers begin to sew. What with the little folk's needs taking precedence, it's time to look about for timely suggestions on the subject.

As little daughter emerges from the studio floors or over endless hours of discussion in Ye This, or the Ye That Tea room on the Main street, she comes to the blouse—it should show clever little trimming features. There is a new trim stitch decoration which is very effective and easily done. The work is entirely done by sewing machine. All that is needed for this is a trim stitch thread in both needle and bobbin, the needle being of the coverstitch and the gauge set to nine or ten stitches to the inch. Worked in bright colors the effect is that of embroidery. The blouse which completes the jacket suit pictured, is of cross-hair lawn, all edges bound with bias trim.

There are many pretty checked materials which will make up successfully after this fashion. A rayon and wool weave is suggested, for mixtures of this sort launder perfectly, the presence of the rayon keeping the wool from shrinking. It also adds a pretty luster. The jacket may be fashioned along simplest lines as the picture portrays. As to the blouse, or perhaps it should be spoken of in the plural, for that is the beauty of a jacket suit—it admits of many a change when it comes to the blouse—it should show clever little trimming features.

There is a tendency in designing party frocks for the very young to introduce long-skirted effects with quaint high waists and sashes. A yellow-flowered white organdie, for instance, has a floor length full skirt. The high waist is defined with a wide sash of yellow taffeta.

Handsome and as practical as it is good looking is white washable satin for the making of dressy frocks and blouses for little folks, for anyone who has had the experience of washing satin of this description knows how perfectly it may be tubbed.

(© 1933 Western Newspaper Union.)

NEW MODELS GIVE VERVE TO SATIN

Take a length of black satin, add to it a dash of white satin, and you have a most wearable frock. Early in the season there was quite a lot of satin shown, but it hasn't been worn so much through the winter.

But for early spring it would not be surprising to see several models of black satin with white satin touches making a grand success. Such a black satin frock, cut on suit lines, is vastly becoming and is luxurious without being too lavish.

Always an effort should be made to see that there is a dash and a gay air to the black satin frock; otherwise it has a tendency to look heavy and set, which means, of course, that it looks old and is inclined to make the wearer look rather too matronly, something that even the matron of long standing usually wants to avoid.

BUTTONED BLOUSE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

It is considered the chic for the blouse to button straight up the front as you see in the picture. This model is of emerald green wool, finished with bindings of brown braid. It is worn with a skirt of red brown wool. Broad kid oxfords with built-up leather heels answer to the call of the hour for definitely smart footwear. The brown angora turban with small green feathers at each side supplies its quota of chic.

Warm Compliment
Betty was a plump young matron who realized that her fondness for gay colors must be restrained in her choice of street clothes, in order not to emphasize her bulk. Therefore she hailed the fashion of bright-colored "hostess pajamas" with enthusiasm, and invested in a bright red set. She waited with patience for her husband to come home that evening and comment on her looks. He walked in, took a look at her splendor, and remarked, with more candor than kindness, "Heavens, Betty, you look like a blazing barn!"

THE STORY

Hiram Butterworth, miser, decides to leave his fortune to Elmer Clarke, a poor young nephew. He tells Abolom McPeake, his lawyer, of a deal forty years ago in which he swindled a man out of $40,000, and arranged for payment with interest. Butterworth dies suddenly. Through a gossiping telegraph operator the town of Pilarotos hears of Elmer's fortune before he does. Nellie Cathcart, Elmer's sweetheart, tells him his inheritance is more than a million. "Colorado Charley" and his partner, Mae, decide to pluck Elmer. Nellie insists that Elmer see more of the world before their marriage. Unknown to Elmer, Nellie is heiress of the late Butterworth and she figures there is about $1,000,000 coming to her. Elmer becomes a candidate for school trustee. Posing as a newspaper reporter under the name of Doris Gatewood, Colorado Charley's confederate calls on Elmer.

"You're very kind. By the way, Mr. Clarke, if you'll forgive me for mentioning it, your piano has a wonderful tone, but it needs tuning."

"I wasn't aware of that. Nobody has opened the old ruin since my mother passed away over five years ago."

"And you live quite alone?"

He nodded, while he appraised her with the impersonal air of good breeding which was his natural heritage. He decided she was the most dashing young woman he had ever seen. In fact, she was more beautiful than Nellie Cathcart—and Elmer had thought that an impossibility for any woman.

"Perhaps, he told himself, that was due to the undeniable 'air' of her more than to superiority of sheer physical beauty. Nellie, too, had an air, but it was natural, while Miss Doris Gatewood appeared to have acquired hers. She was dressed in a manner which Elmer could not have described; like all of her sex all he knew about women's clothes was that they looked stunning or indifferent. Miss Gatewood's wardrobe then and there in evidence was neither stunning nor indifferent, and Elmer found in his rag bag of a mind a phrase that appeared to describe her and her clothes. She was well groomed.

Her chic little tan hat—it was a Paris model—gave her a saucy air and stirred her face. Her hair was bobbed and as black and glistening as a raven's wing. Her skin was the kind one loves to touch, but whether her glorious coloring was natural or artificial was beyond Elmer's ability to decide. She wore a smart tailored suit of brownish tweed and somewhat mannish cut, brown silk stockings and cunning little brown brogues with tasseled tongues. Her shirtwaist, with a tailored collar, was immaculately white and very plain. She wore Colorado Charley's handsome brown silk tie; her gloves were brown and her eyes were brown, radiant, challenging, alight with interest.

"She's a dard!" thought Elmer Butterworth Clarke. "Brains to spare. Must have, to be a special correspondent of the American Weekly. I've heard writers like her make a hundred or two a week, sometimes more. That's why she can afford such nice clothes. But she isn't overdressed, either. What Nellie would call good taste is the keynote of her get-up."

Miss Doris Gatewood on her part was, without appearing to do so, making a swift appraisal of Elmer Clarke. "Isn't he nice looking?" she asked herself. "And he has nice manners, too, for a hick. He must have had a nice mother. He's small town but not a Reuben, and he's shy and sensitive. Hello, he wears a silver service button in his lapel. He's been to the war and been wounded. Right leg, doubtless. I notice he favors it just a little. He buys his suits ready-made. Much too much of the collegiate atmosphere to the one he's wearing. His tie is a trifle flamboyant, but that's what they're wearing lately.

"He seems reserved and dignified. But he's an old-fashioned boy, takes off his hat in elevators and gives up his seat in street cars to old ladies. Good western type and not fresh. He's taking me in from heels to hair, but his eyes are as innocent and free from desire as a baby's. Elmer, you're a nice boy and I like you. Now to make you like me."

She fished a notebook and a short pencil from her pocket and smiled across at him apologetically. "Of course, Mr. Clarke, I know I'm boring you to the point of warm tears," she began. "But really, you look so kind I can't feel as contrite about it as I ought. Besides, I make my living by boring people—making them talk when they don't want to and putting words into their mouths when they refuse to talk."

"What do you want to know?" he challenged.

"Oh, all about the fortune that's been left you by the uncle you've never seen! I'm ordered to interview you and get a snappy story on how it feels to be a poor man today and a millionaire tomorrow. I'd like to have some expression from you as to your ideas on the obligations of wealth. Does money make for great happiness, or vice versa? What do you expect to do with your money and when? Are you going to marry the one girl who has been waiting for you—or is there one girl?"

"That's out," he reminded her. "It's nobody's business whether there's one girl or two or a dozen—and if there were I should not discuss them."

"Tipped a foul that time," Miss Gatewood went on, flushing prettily. "Still, one never can tell whether the patient will talk on that subject or not, so usually we talk to find out. Pardon. I'll try to stick to my knitting hereafter. Now, then—Mr. Clarke, what is your man Friday cooking for dinner?"

"It smells like corned beef and cabbage to me. This is Thursday, isn't it?"

Miss Gatewood nodded brightly. "And potatoes boiled with their jackets on!" she queried with eager curiosity.

"Isn't He Nice Looking?" She Asked Herself.

oatly. He nodded. "Then you're as plain as I am," she challenged. "I adore plain food and I'm famished."

To himself Elmer said: "I suppose I'll be a dog if I don't invite her to eat some of it. Confound it, I think she expects to be invited, or wants to be. That's just like these bohemian newspaper women." He turned to his visitor. "I should like very much to invite you to dinner, Miss Gatewood, but—"

"I'd adore to come," she interrupted before he could cloak his invitation with more buts. "During dinner we can have a nice, long, comfortable interview."

"Well, Miss Gatewood, if you can manage without a chaperon, I can."

"I'm sure you're not at all a dangerous person, Mr. Clarke."

"I am sure you are!" Elmer came back at her, just like that.

She blushed at the compliment and proved herself equally fast by retorting: "I see you are not a stranger to risks, Mr. Clarke. I had two brothers in the service. One was killed at Solasans and the other was gassed. He hasn't been very well since. He lives with me in Los Angeles."

"Indeed! Well, I had my taste of phosgen gas, too. My lungs are still a little ticklish, but I'm slowly outgrowing the effect. Pardon me, please, while I tell Jasper to set a place for you and add a few fancy touches in your honor."

That was a very delightful if unconventional dinner. Miss Gatewood was charming. It was her business to be charming and she knew her business. Her charm received a considerable impetus, however, from the charms which she extracted from Elmer. Under the ameliorating influence of her delightful Ornaments scratched in plaster and mud are the oldest form of surface decoration of record. Even before primitive man developed characteristics which we of this day would consider civilized, he began to scratch language and decorations on walls of his habitation. Later, when the struggle for self-preservation, food and shelter grew (see strenuous, man made better, plaster and decorated more ornately.

Perfection in mixing plaster was reached in a very remote period as well indicated by examination of the earliest samples still standing in hard, durable condition. The scientific composition of such examples compares even favorably with modern plasters. The pyramids of Egypt contain plastering done at least 4,000 years ago, still hard and serviceable. It is interesting to note from recent discoveries that the principal tools of the ancients were substantially identical in design, shape and purpose with modern tools. Also ful personality. Elmer was in perfect form. He was interviewed without being aware of it, nor did Doris Gatewood have to interview him. Everything she wanted to know came out in their conversation. In fact, the lady almost forgot she was playing a part.

She was returning to Los Angeles on the train which came through Pilarotos at ten-thirty that night. After dinner she suggested that, unless Elmer had something better to do, they might kill time by going to a movie. Since Nellie was dining out that night and Elmer had nothing better to do than escort his new-found acquaintance to the movie, he declared he could think of nothing more delightful. So they went to see a thriller.

I'll try to stick to my knitting hereafter. Now, then—Mr. Clarke, what is your man Friday cooking for dinner?"

"It smells like corned beef and cabbage to me. This is Thursday, isn't it?"

Miss Gatewood nodded brightly. "And potatoes boiled with their jackets on!" she queried with eager curiosity.

Upon arrival in Los Angeles, Mae, alias Doris Gatewood, reported to Colorado Charley that the fish was on the line; that nothing now remained to do save get out the net and land him.

CHAPTER VIII

When Elmer Clarke returned to his humble home after seeing Doris Gatewood off at the railroad station, he was sensible of having passed one of the most delightful evenings in years. Of course he had spent many delightful hours in Nellie Cathcart's company—Nellie was always delightful; but about this other girl there had been a charm so utterly different from Nellie's that Elmer, after the fashion of his sex, yielded to the delight of not bothering to analyze it.

She dined him. She had, in effect, dared him to like her—and he had. He wished he might see her again.

Elmer lunched with Nellie the following day and discussed with her his coming campaign for election to the board of trustees of the Union high school—a subject in which Nellie displayed the most avid interest. For a reason so vague he did not pause to define it, he refrained from telling Nellie of the visit of the young lady reporter the evening previous. Nellie wondered why he did not. She had seen him walking down to the station with this stranger and had marked her thoroughly, from the toes of her smart boots to the tip of her saucer hat. In particular, Nellie had been struck by a note of spurious merriment in her gurgling laugh as the pair passed, too interested in themselves to see her. That laugh had been just a trifle too loud.

On Tuesday Elmer received a long letter from Abolom McPeake, conveying very definite information regarding the estate. It consisted largely of very valuable business real estate in the city of Muscatine, a plethora of frame shanties in the poorer section of the city, from which Uncle Hiram had drawn rentals entirely disproportionate to the value of the property, stocks, bonds, farm mortgages and a little private banking business—a surer's shop, in reality.

Mr. McPeake felt confident that the little banking business could readily be disposed of to form a branch bank of a large local institution. Of course, in view of Uncle Hiram's death, this bank, so dependent upon his presence, would not now be sold at much of a profit, but it could be disposed of that the plaster so much used by the Egyptians was made of calcined gypsum, like the plaster of Paris of today. Reeds were used for lath.

City Charters

In some states a number of different charters have been framed by the legislatures and cities are permitted a choice of these. In other states each city of a certain class is permitted to frame its own charter, which, when it is approved by the voters, goes into effect, provided it does not conflict with the state laws or constitution. In a few states the legislatures specify the charter forms for cities of various classes.

"Fleekle Multitude"

The word "mob" is a contraction of the Latin "mobile vulgus" meaning "fleckle multitude." It came into use in England as a slang term some time between the reign of Charles II and the overthrow of James II.

without loss, and McPeake advised this course.

After reading that letter, Elmer felt more than ever inclined to follow the dictates of his humble ambition and purchase a fine car. He carried the letter over to the Pilarotos Commercial Trust & Savings bank and showed it to the charming trust officer of that institution. Nellie was much interested and proffered some advice when Elmer declared he was going down to Los Angeles the following day to place an order for the new car. He promised Nellie the first ride in it. Before he could drive away from the agency with his new possession, the next day, a smart uniformed chauffeur appeared and reminded him that a gentleman able to afford a first-class car could not possibly descend to driving it himself. Elmer was struck by the force of this argument and engaged the man at a salary of fifty dollars a week.

While waiting for the license plates to arrive, he telephoned Doris Gatewood and was rewarded with shrill feminine cries of delight from the lady in question. Could he not come out to the house for lunch? She had just finished her story and was about to mail it—perhaps he would care to read it first?

Elmer would. He said he would be delighted to; and at one o'clock he slid noiselessly up to Colorado Charley's dainty bungalow and discovered the girl and her alleged brother waiting for him on the lawn.

The famed prodigal, returning from his unwholesome adventures with the hicks and the swine, could not have been received with more enthusiasm. The luncheon was exquisite and served by Doris Gatewood herself. She flushed prettily when Colorado Charley reminded Elmer that she had cooked it herself. Charley ate little, however, and appeared languid and listless. Having been informed that he was a veteran of the World War, Elmer at once had for Colorado Charley a distinct feeling of fraternity, and the conversation was almost entirely of soldiering. In preparation for the luncheon man had "boned up" on the A. E. F. from an inventory of soldier at Arrowhead hospital and another at the Veterans' home at Sawtelle. When it seemed that he might be getting into deep water, Doris saved him by suggesting that it was time for him to take his after-luncheon nap.

"Poor Charley gets so excited and nervous when he talks of those terrible scenes," she explained to Elmer. "It wears him out even to think about them."

Elmer suggested that Doris and he go for a ride. Doris replied that she would adore it—so they went, in calm defiance of Elmer's voluntary promise to Nellie Cathcart that she should be the very first person to ride in his new car. In justice to Elmer it must be added, however, that he had completely forgotten that promise. Having been lightly mused, it had been as lightly forgotten.

While in France Elmer, in common with thousands of other young Americans, had visited Paris after the Armistice and had there listened to the old saw that if one should sit long enough on the sidewalk in front of the Cafe de la Paix, everybody he had ever known would eventually pass by. Elmer had sat there half a day and been accosted by nobody more important than a military policeman who had made him exhibit, in writing, his right to sit there.

It occurred to Elmer upon his return to Pilarotos three days later that this is indeed a very small world. An exile from Pilarotos had seen him driving along Santa Monica boulevard with Doris Gatewood, and a former Pilarotos belle, who had emigrated to Los Angeles and was eking out a precarious existence as an extra in the movies, wrote home to Allice Goodfellow that she had seen Elmer Clarke fox-trotting in a Hollywood cafe with a girl who had everything on her except the kitchen stove.

This gossip so interested Allice that she felt it her Christian duty to mention it to Nellie Cathcart, who said nothing but wondered a little.

Elmer arrived home in a singularly happy frame of mind. He had had a perfectly delightful time in Los Angeles. At parting Doris had, in her brother's presence and with that candor and charm which he found so fascinating, insisted upon kissing him goodbye. Then she had shaken his hand in farewell. She said she wouldn't sleep a wink until she knew he had arrived home safely—and wouldn't he telegraph her the instant that happy end had been accomplished? Elmer would. He promised her solemnly to that effect—and he kept his promise.

He should have known better. Old Lady Bryr handled that telegram. Lacking a note of the lady's name and address and promptly circulated a report that Nellie Cathcart had better look out—that a girl in Los Angeles was after Elmer Clarke and was in a fair way of landing him.

The theft of the queen bee from a hive could not possibly have upset a community of bees one-half so much as the three reports on Elmer's Los Angeles activities upset Pilarotos. The town buzzed with gossip and idle speculation.

If it had been pro-Elmer and anti-Nellie prior to this fatal trip to Los Angeles, it was now pro-Nellie to the last man and woman. Elmer had been regarded, the moment news of his inheritance had become known, as first prize, won by Miss Nellie Cathcart. Now, to have a stranger best Nellie, set the town arid with excitement.

American Culture

I should like to meet in every European country woman as truly cultivated as those whom I have seen in the great colleges of the eastern United States—at Bryn Mawr, at Vassar and at Smith.

My students at Princeton were capable of following intelligently a lecture in French, and their reading was wide. To read the output of the younger American authors is to be convinced that it could not be the expression of an uncultured people. A novelist such as Hemingway, by his taste and his restraint, heralds a great epoch. A critic like Edmund Wilson would do honor to any French or English review.

The tone of the best magazines indicates a true taste for ideas. In the Garden temple, where the three gods pass a week, Hindus believe that when God comes to the earth he incarnates himself in one of the ten forms and that on the day of the festival God incarnates himself as a "Yaman" or dwarf and appears in Juggernaut's car. Those who are fortunate enough to see him, they contend, attain salvation. The orthodox Hindus believe, too, there is much virtue in aiding to drag the car about a mile, from one end of the town to the other, which accounts largely for the eager rush to Puri each year.

For my part, I think, like my fellow countryman, Paul Morand, that we shall have difficulty in saving our western civilization during the next few decades, but that one of its sanctuaries, along with Paris, London and some of the great European universities, will be the rocky islets of Manhattan.—Andre Maurois in the London Morning Post.

Uncle Dan, centenarian and ex-slave, is a pensioner of a South Carolina family. One day, while he was drawing his regular dole, his present patron took occasion to rally him good-humoredly on not being worth the cost of his upkeep; in fact, of being lazy and no-account in general. "Yes, seh, I expect that's right," the old man agreed. "But it ain't my fault. I remembers the day when your granddaddy paid $1200 for me, and then Mr. Lincoln comes along with the 'manicipation proclamation and made me just plumb worthless.'—Country Gentleman.

PHILIP CARPER CHOSEN SECRETARY FOR 30th YEAR

For some unknown cause, the opposition that was to have appeared at the election of officers for the Farmers' Mutual Insurance Co., at Auburn, Saturday, failed to appear, and Mr. Carper was again selected the secretary for the thirtieth year. It is needless to say that Mr. Carper's services have been most agreeable and efficient, as he has been chosen by the policy holders at their annual meeting each year.

Noah Lung of Auburn will again head the organization as president. Frank Lyon, also of Auburn, was re-elected vice president; Philip Carper of Jackson township will start serving as secretary for the thirtieth consecutive year; Perry Foote of Richland township is treasurer and Charles H. Bangs, also of Richland township, is actuary.

On the board of directors, Ira Williams of Union and George Harms of Fairfield township were elected. They with three hold-overs, Albert Thrush of Butler township, William Potter of Franklin township and Claude Fitch of Butler township constitute the board.

The company had a balance for the year of $397.36 and $55,088.24 for the year 1931. The amount of the insurance in force is $12,689,000.00 and the amount in the several townships of the county is as follows:

Butler township, $339,560.
Concord township, $590,000.
Fairfield township, $1,424,640.
Franklin township, $1,062,630.
Grant township, $482,790.
Jackson township, $1,801,390.
Keyser township, $952,590.
Newville township, $385,230.
Richland township, $1,064,270.
Smithfield township, $1,006,870.
Spencer township, $555,120.
Stafford township, $453,490.
Troy township, $532,260.
Union township, $732,960.
Wilmington township, $1,188,100.
Losses paid, $29,339.93.
All notes paid, $23,100.00.
Interest paid, $744.81.

DID YOU KNOW?

That there are 232,000 churches in the United States?
Separated into 212 denominations.

With 44,380,000 members over 13 years old.

And which own property valued at $3,800,000,000.

And spend $851,000,000 a year on current work.

The average size of the American church is 191 members.

If the church could but unite its great power for good it would be the greatest force in the world for God and man. But its unhappy divisions into over two hundred groups leaves it with only partial power and influence in a world of need.

For Long Winter Evenings
Brighten Up!

The sun may set about 5 P. M.—but not Edison MAZDA Lamps. Rather, that's when they set to work—brightening up thousands of homes. And that's why Edison MAZDA Lamps are known from coast to coast as "The Sun's Only Rival."

We're sure you don't enjoy trying to work, trying to read, trying to sew, trying to cook, trying to see in the half-light of these early evenings. But you'd more than enjoy whole long winter evenings if you could bask in the plentiful, cheerful brilliance of light freely used.

Don't spend another evening in gloom. Spend a few cents with us for Edison MAZDA Lamps. For your convenience in always having spares on hand, we recommend a handy carton of six lamps.

How It Started

By JEAN NEWTON

Why is it "Manna"? "WHAT is it?" inquired the sons of Israel, when, in the course of their forty years wandering through the desert, and on the point of starvation, they suddenly perceived this heaven sent food that had dropped from the skies during the night, as described in the Bible, book of Exodus.

They had never seen this thing before—tiny, round substances, "as small as hoarfrost"—which, every day except on the Sabbath, dotted the wilderness and saved them from dying from hunger.

And the Hebrew form of the question asked by the Israelites was "Man hu?" (What is it?)—which, in slightly modified form is our present word for "manna."

Four Methods Used to Get Texan to School

Fort Worth, Texas.—It takes four methods of transportation to get Bill Gregg to his classes at Texas Christian university. Gregg's parents take him from his home in Cleburne to the train by automobile; he rides the train to Fort Worth; walks from the station to his street car, which he rides to the campus.

Dr. Frederick Webb Hodge, whose "Handbook of American Indians" has remained standard through the years, has quit the Heye Foundation to become head of the Southwest museum in Los Angeles, Calif. This is a grand thing for the Southwest museum, but a bad break for those of us here in New York who, any time we ever wanted scientific information, have sought Doctor Hodge and got the answer. His specialty is, of course, ethnology, or perhaps archaeology. At various times he was with the geological survey and the Smithsonian, and he was head of the bureau of American ethnology, but I rarely have seen a man who knew so much about everything. Many a time I have asked him questions, not alone concerning branches of science outside his own, but also on subjects of history and general information, and he never failed me. I certainly am going to miss that man. Give me five minutes to telephone him, and I could make anyone believe in my erudition. Moreover, Doctor Hodge and I always have seen eye to eye on matters of diet. We both consider beefsteak a highly healthful food and when we wish a bit of a change we agree on the same Chinese restaurant. Doctor Hodge is one of the few who has climbed the "Enchanted Mesa." That huge chunk of New Mexico sandstone may not be any higher than the Empire State building, but it has no elevator, which makes a difference on a hot day. I'erhaps the thing for which Doctor Hodge is best known is his famous work in the excavation of Hawikuh. But the things we non-scientists know him best for are the humor and charm, which makes this scholar and gentleman so delightful a companion.

It was Doctor Hodge who told me the story of the Ayer collection in the Newberry library in Chicago, a collection containing many books on the Indian. Edward E. Ayer founded his fortune on railroad ties. But his library was founded on a couple of books he read in his youth. In his early days, Mr. Ayer was in the army and stationed at Tucson, Ariz. Here he got hold of Prescott's "Conquest of Mexico." It was in two volumes, bound in black cloth. It fascinated him. He determined that some day he would own those books. When later he rejoined his family in a small town near Chicago, he used to drive a wagon to the city to get goods for his father's store. It was on such a trip that he saw in a window a two-volume, black bound "Conquest of Mexico." The price was $6. Young Ayer asked the bookseller to hold the books, offering to pay 50 cents down and the remainder in installments. The man said he looked honest; that he would trust him; that he might take the two volumes with him. Mr. Ayer never had those books rebound, but years later he took them to London and paid Zehndorf $125 to make slip covers for them. More than any other volumes in his library, those were the two money couldn't buy.

The Kitchen Cabinet

Sandwiches Always in Season Many directions for sandwich making tell us to butter the bread before it is cut from the loaf. This is not necessary if the butter is creamed. Creaming the butter makes it go further, has a smoother spread and is more saving.

A hot sandwich may range from a dainty toasted morsel to serve with a cup of tea, to a substantial variety which is a meal in itself. Watch the lunch counter, which in most cities one finds in drug stores, department stores and wherever hungry people may be found in any number, you will note that a square meal with a cup of hot drink or milk may be made from a hot sandwich. Two slices of bread with thin sliced meat and plenty of good gravy over it provides a fairly substantial and sustaining dish.

Hot Beef Sandwich.—Take one pound of chopped beef, one small onion and one green pepper (minced). Brown in one tablespoonful of butter, season to taste with tomato sauce and add a teaspoonful of flour. Place in buttered buns and place in the oven to keep hot.

Hot Tomato Sandwich.—Broil two thin slices of bacon until crisp. Toast two thin slices of bread—whole-wheat is preferred. Put sliced tomatoes on one slice, add the bacon and cover with another slice. Put into a hot oven or heat carefully on a hot griddle.

Cheese and Pepper Sandwiches.—Pour boiling water over three large peppers, let stand a few minutes then rub off the outer skin and remove the pith and seeds. Put the peppers and a half pound of cheese through the food chopper, add one-half teaspoonful of salt, paprika and mustard and a dash of cayenne. Mix and blend thoroughly. Cut bread one-fourth inch thick and butter evenly. Spread half the slices with the pepper and cheese mixture, press on the top slices and toast in a hot oven.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Member of Faculty, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)
(© 1919, Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for February 7
THE SLAVERY OF SIN (TEMPERANCE LESSON)

LESSON TEXT—John 8:31-35.
GOLDEN TEXT—Jesus answered them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, Whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Tells Us How to Be Free.
JUNIOR TOPIC—How Jesus Makes Us Free.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Fight for Freedom.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Slavery or Freedom?

We are living in a day of boasted freedom. Revolt from authority is almost universal. Anarchy lifts up its vicious head in the home, society, business, state, nation, and the world. It is this spirit which is revolting against the Eighteenth amendment under the pretext of liberty and freedom. Sin which is fundamentally and essentially lawlessness (1 John 3:4) is back of all violations of the Eighteenth amendment. The vital truth of this lesson is the only solution of the prohibition question.

I. Discipleship and Freedom (vv. 31, 32).
Violations of the Eighteenth amendment are not true disciples of Christ. Some church men may be against this law, but not true disciples. In these verses Jesus indicates the following stages of discipleship:

1. Believe on Jesus (v. 31). This means not only assent to Christ's teaching, but acknowledgment of his authority. It means to give Christ the place of lordship over the life. All who allow Christ to rule their lives are in sympathetic obedience to the national constitution.

2. Continue in Christ's words (v. 31). To continue in his Word means:

a. Meditation upon it.
b. Confidence in it.
c. Prayer over it.
d. Obedience to it.

The teachings of Jesus Christ constitute the standard of life for every true disciple. His words are adequate for every decision, habit, or duty. The word of God is the sole and adequate rule of authority to the Christian. Indulgence in intoxicating liquor is prohibited by God's Word, even to the extent that drunkards are debarred from heaven (1 Cor. 6:10).

3. Assurance (v. 31). "Ye are my disciples indeed." Continuance in Christ's words demonstrates the fact of discipleship.

4. Knowledge of the truth (v. 32). Those who obey Christ enter upon higher knowledge. Demands made by God's Word are not always apprehended at the first, but those who continue in the ways of obedience come to know God and see that what he demanded was right (John 13:7).

5. Freedom (v. 32). The one who renders implicit obedience to Christ enters upon real freedom (Romans 8:2).

II. Righteousness and Freedom (vv. 33, 34).
Those who practice sin are in slavery. The evil door is under the mastery of the Devil; "whosoever committeth sin is the servant of sin." Doctor Pearson says that the sinner's slavery is threefold:

1. Slavery to guilt.
2. Slavery to penalty or judgment.
3. Slavery to power or habit.

A little thought shows the abjectness of this slavery. Conscience is coming. All know that judgments of life all men acknowledge coming judgment and have "a certain fearful looking for of judgment." All know that they are helpless to break their habits of wrongdoing. Freedom is possible only in conformity with the divine will.

III. Sonship and Freedom (vv. 35, 36).
Regeneration is necessary in order to obtain freedom from sin. Sin's power must be broken through the salvation of the individual. The works of the Devil can only be destroyed through the regeneration of the individual. Happily Christ can destroy the Devil's works through the sonship of those who believe on him (1 John 3:7-9). The only way to secure sobriety on the part of man is to get him saved through faith in the Lord Jesus Christ. The Eighteenth amendment can no more make a nation sober than the two commandments can make a man tell the truth and desist from murder. The only way to get the benefit of the Eighteenth amendment is to have a revival. It is in securing the sinner's freedom by bringing him as a child into the family of God. So long as people are ignorant of Christ they will remain in bondage to sin. Sin is a hard taskmaster and has as its end death (Romans 6:23).

FRANCE'S NEW CANAL

A Smile From the Proposed Canal Route in France.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)—WNU Service.

TWO French cities, Bordeaux and Carcassonne, the former a great port and the latter a sleepy ancient inland town, are literally in the way of the canal which France is planning to dig from the Atlantic ocean to the Mediterranean sea, thus affording a new waterway to the Mediterranean from the west.

Bordeaux will be the Atlantic terminus of the canal, which will include portions of the Garonne river and the Canal du Midi which was built in 1681. The canal will be about 250 miles long and will cost approximately $100,000,000.

Bordeaux is seldom in the headlines in peace times, but let Paris be threatened from the north or the east, and Bordeaux would doubtless resume its old place in the spotlight. During the Franco-Prussian war, when the enemy occupied Paris, and during the early days of the World war, before the Germans had been stopped in their initial rush on the French capital, the machinery of government was hastily transferred to the great commercial city on the left bank of the Garonne.

At the time of the French revolution, too, the Girondists used Bordeaux as their chief headquarters.

Geography is Bordeaux' trump card, not only in time of war but in time of peace as well. Although a seaport, the city is 60 miles from open sea on a river that provides adequate docking facilities but is still not deep enough for warships of heavy draft.

A few barges, judiciously gunked across the channel, would block everything else at any time desired. Far down in the southwestern part of France, the city has prospered almost undisturbed since it first came into prominence as the capital of Aquitania Secunda of the Romans.

Bordeaux, however, should not be regarded only as a governmental pinhead. It is a thriving commercial city, the fourth in population in France, and has a foreign trade exceeded, among French ports, only by Marseilles and Havre. With the province of Burgundy, in the eastern part of France, the district around Bordeaux shares the wine-producing honors of the country.

The Yanks Remember Bordeaux.
Bordeaux is largely terra incognita to the average tourist. None of the large transatlantic lines from North America terminates here, although there are many smaller companies, especially those connecting France with South America. Nor is it on any heavily traveled route to other parts of Europe. Bordeaux cannot benefit by way-travel as can Marseilles, Nice or Lyons. Travelers to Spain and to the shore resorts around Biarritz generally pass through the city without stopping.

The American doughboy, however, knows Bordeaux. When the United States went into the World war the railroads in the northern part of France were greatly overworked and choked with traffic. The northern ports, too, were menaced by the submarine. The best southward conditions were better. Brest, St. Nazaire, Nantes, Bordeaux and Bayonne thus spring suddenly into front-page headlines of American newspapers.

Docking facilities, even at Bordeaux, were rather poor at that time. It was necessary for American engineers virtually to reconstruct some of the ports. In the spring of 1917 only two large ships could berth for unloading at the same time in Bordeaux, but a year later there were places for fifteen vessels. Bassen, a small village six miles down the Garonne from Bordeaux, was given fine docks and warehouses. A great deal of the supplies and ammunition of the A. E. F. were landed here. Bordeaux was one of the few cities to benefit by the war.

Commercial but Attractive.
Despite the fact that it is largely a commercial city, Bordeaux is, in many respects, very attractive. The main part of the city curves around the left bank of the Garonne river, which at this point describes a wide semi-circle. Low white houses take the place of the tenements so characteristic of other French cities, while the public buildings are grouped in the center of the city along public gardens or line the imposing quays of the waterfront. The whole city is surrounded by a circle of boulevards.

The Cathedral of St. Andre, started in the Eleventh century, is considered one of the best proportioned Gothic churches in southern France. The Pont de Bordeaux, one of the bridges connecting the city with the right bank of the Garonne, was long considered among the finest in the world. Many of the magnificent private homes of the city were built when the great merchants of Bordeaux were at the height of their wealth and power, and are comparatively modern.

Around Bordeaux are smiling hills and fresh valleys, covered with vineyards. The vines they produce have made the district famous and have sent the names of Medoc, Graves, St. Julien, St. Emilion, etc., around the world. Nearby also is the little town of Cognac, which has lent its name to the most potent of French liquors.

It is the center of the brandy trade of the district. South of Bordeaux stretch great pine forests and regions of waving grass, like those of our southern Atlantic states.

Carcassonne is Two Towns.
Carcassonne straddles the River Aude about 50 miles southeast of Toulouse. Travelers arriving at the railway station in the so-called new town on the west bank of the Aude scan the panorama for a city of antiquities, but it is not found on that side of the river.

The new town is only about three hundred years older than early American towns. Some of the inhabitants of the old town across the river, revolted against the king of France and were driven out of the old town walls. They were allowed to settle on the site of the new town. That was in 1247.

A beautiful, shaded parkway near the railroad station introduces Carcassonne, but a few steps beyond the traveler is hemmed in between walls of stone and brick buildings rising from the sidewalks. The streets run at right angles, forming solid blocks, the monotony of which is relieved only by a few squares and small parks and a wide, shaded boulevard.

The Place Carnot is a combined market place, loafing place, and meeting place in Carcassonne.

Famous Walls of the Old City.
Cross the River Aude, enter the gates of the old town, and you are on a site which was occupied by a settlement somewhere back in the mists of history. You may cross the Aude by a modern bridge or, with the ancient ramparts ahead of you, you might prefer the old Thirteenth century span. The frowning gray walls of the old town were impregnable when battering rams were the "high explosives" of attackers. There are two walls with about 25 feet between them. One glance at these ramparts convinces the traveler that one historian was right when he said that one famine or treason within the walls could cause the capture of the town.

The walls form an irregular oval about the old town and have only four openings. One opening in each wall is large enough to admit horses and wheeled vehicles, and each is guarded by a series of turrets and towers. The other openings are mere holes in the walls, wide enough for only one man to squeeze through.

Inside, narrow, cobbled streets breathe an atmosphere of many centuries ago. There is the venerable St. Nazaire Cathedral with stained-glass windows depicting Bible scenes, and the Chateau, where high walls once echoed with the gay revelry of Carcassonne's feudal lords. These old structures look down upon streets almost deserted, for the life of Carcassonne today is in the new town where the wine trade, one of the old traditions of the city, still flourishes.

LIKE THE THOUGHT OF BEING MARTYRS

Some Deliberately Seem to Cultivate the Habit.

Successes are all right, but it's your failures that make life really worth while—if you are really interested in the art of Martyrdom. All that's necessary to make you a top-flight martyr is to convince yourself (a) that you have been wronged, and (b) that you have great Spiritual Qualities.

Take business, for instance. You are anxious to put that transaction across, and you go to Smithers and give him your sales talk. He retaliates by giving you a super sales talk in which he explains clearly why your schemes are all wet. If you are foolish you put that down as a tough break, and sulk about it. If you are wise you become a Martyr on the Altar of Big Business, and have loads of fun. You convince yourself that you are a Noble Soul—not interested in material things, a Soul too good for the crass mercenary world in which you have been placed. People don't appreciate your Spiritual Side. Cultivate the habit of not being appreciated, and in no time you'll be so happy you could sing.

Or take sport. You go into a tournament, and take a beating from some duffer who obviously has no more Spiritual Qualities than a side order of spinach. Is your failure due to inability? Nonsense. It's due to your Spiritual Qualities. Think of the people you've been practicing with. Haven't you been practicing against inferior opposition just to give the others Joy? Of course you have. If you're worth 2 cents as a martyr, couldn't you beat anybody in the world if you concentrated purely on winning instead of playing for the Joy of the Game? And there you are. You're a Noble Soul, and glad you lost.

Did you take a beating at bridge? Didn't you sacrifice yourself and make a fourth when you'd have preferred to be alone communing with your soul? (And maybe you had had cards, too.) Disappointed in love? Obviously not appreciated for your Finer Side. Not invited to that party when you should have been? Because you refuse to stoop to being a pusher. Of course not everybody in the world can be a martyr, but be honest with yourself. Aren't you one?—Kansas City Times.

Cold Insurance

He carries it with him, ready for just such times. That little box of Bayer Aspirin. If he catches cold, what if? Bayer Aspirin will stop it. If his throat feels sore, he will end the soreness with one good gargle made from these tablets.

Dangerous complications can follow the neglect of "a common cold." Every case of tonsillitis began with "just a sore throat." It's a wise plan to take aspirin after any undue exposure to bad weather, or whenever there is any chance that you've caught cold. If it's genuine aspirin it can't possibly hurt you; and how it does banish the aches and pains caused by colds, neuralgia, neuritis, lumbago, and even rheumatism.

Bayer Aspirin will insure your comfort through the worst cold season. The more susceptible you are to colds, the more you need it. Does not depress the heart.

Porcupines Destroy Trees
San Juan national forest officials have discovered a new enemy of the trees—the porcupine. The animals rub trees with their sharp quills, stripping a ring around them and causing them to "spike top," or die at the top first. Forest Supervisor Andrew Hutton estimated porcupines have caused as much damage to the timber during the last few years as that caused by fire. A campaign against them, he said, would be made.

Known as Sea Unicorn
The narwhal, an Arctic whale, is known also as the "sea unicorn."

CORRECT GROWTH for Children

You can help your children gain sturdy bones and strong teeth by giving them Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil daily. (It's the Vitamin D content that does it.) But there's also a wealth of Vitamin A present that builds resistance—in parents as well as children—to such common ills as winter colds. It's the pleasant, easy way to take cod liver oil. ## SPENCERVILLE HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

News Events of Interest to the Public
In General

Rev. Homer Studabaker had charge of the Chapel service, Tuesday morning. He dealt on the subject of reliance on God and heavenly things instead of reliance on worldly things, with the story of Job as illustration. One song number, "Old Folks at Home," was sung at the opening of the service. Rev. Studabaker dismissed with benediction.

A debate on "Resolved that the growing difference between the north and south was due mainly to slavery," was sponsored Wednesday afternoon by certain members of the Junior and Senior U. S. History class. Those on the affirmative were Lenore Laub, Harry Farver and Lloyd Laux. Those on the negative were Frederick Laub and Hubert McNamara. The judges decided in favor of the affirmative. Both sides delivered good points.

Trustee F. E. Rhodes was a caller at the school house on Friday.

Mr. Carl F. Stallman also called at the school on Friday.

Soup day last Thursday proved to be a bargain day as well. A big bowl of potato soup and a hot dog sandwich was valued at 5 cents. Needless to say the cook shack ran out of supplies.

The girls in the sewing class are now working on fancy pillows.

The local teams played LaOtto on Friday night. The junior high team won while the senior high team lost. The fans were not very peppy with their yells, maybe that helped.

Those absent on Monday were Ralph Tharp, Dwight Koch, Frederick Laub.

Little Frances Russell has been quite ill for the past week.

Theda Tyndall was taken ill at school one day at noon. She was taken to her home by Frederick Laub.

Mrs. Blanche Nugen, the attendance officer, called at the school on Monday.

The senior class met to decide on the arrangement of data for their commencement invitations. The date for pictures has not been settled definitely as yet.

If we have made no mistakes, those on the six weeks honor roll are: LaNore Laub, Loyd Laux, Eunice Gerig, Florence Steward, Glenn Brace, Harry Farver, Dwight Koch, Hubert McNamara, Alice Hart, William Erick, Irah McCrory, Alice Baker, Warren Rectenwall, Fred Steward, Margaret Walter, Luella Meek, Blanche Sponhour, Margaret Kimes, Fred Stemen, Loren Dale Laub, Madonna Kelley.

There are several pupils who deserve honorable mention for excellent work; but due to absence their names do not appear on the honor roll.

There are several who have semester average grades of B or better, among whom are LaNore Laub, Hubert McNamara, Fred Steward, Margaret Walter, Alice Hart, Edith Wade, Warren Rectenwall, Lee Chapman, Glenn Brace, Eunice Gerig, William Erick, Lea Laux, Harry Farver, John Franklin.

SPENCERVILLE

Edward Billman is confined to his home with rheumatism. His nephew, Forrest Beta is assisting with the work at present.

Mrs. Cleo Reed will entertain the Young People's class of the Methodist at Sunday School at her home Thursday evening.

Mr. Joel Betz, who is at the home of his daughter and husband, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Perkins, of near Harlan, had the misfortune to fall and injure himself on Sunday morning. Mr. Betz has been in very poor health.

The Young Ladies Social Club met with Mrs. Janice Bowser on Friday evening. Prizes were won by Miss Marjorie Hollabaugh and Mesdames Bina Glaws, Ellen Hart and Gaylon Tustison. The guests were Mrs. Audra Wade and daughters, Mary and Edith.

Mrs. Minnie Uim will be hostess to the C. C. Club on Friday afternoon.

Rev. Homer Studabaker began revival meetings on Monday evening at the Scipio Church.

The Home Missionary Society will meet on Thursday afternoon at the Methodist parsonage.

Mrs. Minnie Kimes and children, of Fort Wayne spent Sunday in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Harvey Kimes.

Mrs. Maurice Hollabaugh spent the week-end with her aunt and uncle, Mr. and Mrs. Vet. Chandler at Hobart, Indiana.

Roy Bowser and daughter, April and George Kinsey of St. Joe and James Reed and wife were Sunday evening guests in the R. U. Bowser home.

Jim Quinn and family, of Fort Wayne were Sunday dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Westman. Mr. and Mrs. Gerry Wasson were evening callers.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Widdifield and family and Mr. and Mrs. Burl Graves of Dayton, Ohio, spent the week-end in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Mortie Widdifield.

Mrs. Paul Clark and baby son, Ronald, of Fort Wayne spent several days last week in the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Doll. Sunday callers in the same home were Mr. and Mrs. George Doll and daughter, Ruthanna and Paul Clark, of Fort Wayne.

LINCOLN

Abraham Lincoln represented qualities which we consider outstandingly American. He was a practical idealist. His faith in the principal of freedom and his consistent fight to maintain it won him a perpetual place among the world's immortals. There is, today, a stringency, a restriction in the free flow of money. Let us face it with the same perseverance as Lincoln faced his problems. America today has a condition of saving which amounts to hoarding. It is not conducive to healthy business, wages, employment or investment. We can struggle out of this slavery to fear by saving sanely, buying wisely.

ST. JOE, DEKALB COUNTY, INDIANA, THURSDAY, FEB. 11, 1932

MISCELLANEOUS PROGRAM GIVEN AT P. T. A.

The fifth meeting of the Concord Township P. T. A. was held at the gym February 9, 1932.

The program was opened with a program by the school band under the direction of John Woodcox.

"Columbia the Gem of the Ocean" was sung by the fifth and sixth grade pupils, followed by "The Gettysburg Address" recited in unison by the sixth grade.

Four pupils from Miss Morris' room then presented a very clever little playlet in memory of George Washington.

The new County Nurse, Miss Eoll, then addressed the group on the subject of "Contagious Diseases." The Bella of Avalon was very beautifully rendered by a group of high school pupils.

Three papers on the life of George Washington: "Youth and Manhood of Washington," "Ability and Behavior," "The Homelife of George and Martha Washington" were given by Keith Dailey, Virginia Shull, and Ethelmae Freeburn, respectively.

Mr. Oak Huselmann, of Auburn discussed the possibilities of securing library facilities from the Auburn Library for our township.

The membership committee and hot lunch committee both gave brief reports. The treasurer reported a balance of $31.12 of the association money in the bank.

ONLY TEN DELINQUENT TAX SALES MADE

Although more than 1,000 items were offered at the annual delinquent tax sale Monday at the DeKalb county court house, only ten sales were made and four of them were in this section of the county.

Lots 1 and 2, block 1, Hart addition, St. Joe, in name of Pearl White, bid in by Samuel Armstrong for amount of tax, $3.

1.40 acres and 90 acre in Newville township, in name of Fort Wayne Investment Co., bid in by Willis Wilson for amount of tax, $3.47.

111.38 acres and 7.85 acres in Concord township in name of Harry Draggoo, bid in by I. M. Woodcox for amount of tax, $370.21.

33 acres in Spencer township, in name of Cornelia Hadsell, bid in by I. M. Woodcox for amount of tax, $55.07.

AUCTION SALE!

Consisting of about 45 new and used farm implements and farm supplies, at 1:00 P. M. Thursday, Feb. 18th. G. F. Burgoyne & Sons Hardware, Hicksville, Ohio. 6tl.

Read that big offer on page 5 of this issue. It will not last long.

Mrs. Zay Sailer spent the week-end with relatives in Fort Wayne.

Rev. V. Odell Harrold, pastor of the M. P. Church is confined to his bed this week, due to nervousness.

Angola will have a new school building and contract was let Tuesday for $110,618 and as much local labor as possible is to be used.

Ora Baker was at Indianapolis last week attending the road meeting, when 100 miles of pavement was sold by the state highway commission. Mr. Baker was figuring on guard rail contracts.

Abraham Lincoln in 1864, From a Portrait Considered by Many to Be His Best

World emigrants in America, since the country had sunk into permanent poverty and even bankruptcy.

Such conditions intermittently continued throughout Lincoln's earlier life. His business ventures in Illinois, ending so disastrously, occurred during a period of National adversity; for, not only during the twenties, but during the thirties, forties and fifties, the American people went through severe financial trials. How mistaken the commentator who, in the midst of these crises, which come to Nations as to individuals through the inevitable process of nature, thought that the progress of this Republic was at an end! It had not even fairly begun. Before our country lay the marvelous development which has made it the richest and most powerful Nation of earth.

Here, in a rude Indiana cabin, was a National resource no traveler would have reckoned. By the light of the fireplace he was reading the life of Washington and the biography of Henry Clay. From the one he gained, according to his testimony, the first impulse of that patriotism of which he became the very incarnation. From the other he became the convinced advocate of the "American System" of Henry Clay which became the faith of the great party Lincoln helped found, and led to its first National victory. Here were thoughts being stirred, in the dark and lonely wilderness, destined to refashion a Nation's history and set its feet on a pathway of progress toward primacy among the Nations.

But Lincoln was possible only because he became the symbol of a faith, the embodiment of a courage, the inspired leader of a love of country, that stirred the hearts of millions of his countrymen. Great leaders are made possible only by great followings. We hear the complaint today that we lack leadership. To what extent is this due to the fact that in a period of prosperity and luxury and ease, all of us in some degree have surrendered to that indifference, that selfishness, that lack of courage and faith, that unreadiness to strive against obstacles, that cynicism and skepticism and despair, which permeating a people in a Republic like ours, make the achievements of leadership impossible? It is hard to keep the faith in times of trial, which test loyalty and tempt fear. How well Lincoln learned this when in the midst of his struggle to save the Union, when the fate of a Nation rested on his shoulder, he was assailed not only from the front but from the rear, alike by friend and foe, and in mid-stream of his administration, in 1862 and later in 1864 he faced the possibility of repudiation by the people in whose cause he was making supreme sacrifice!

We live in an age of cynicism and of pessimism, of criticism and of cowardice. This Nation was made great by men and women of hope and courage. They faced difficulties and endured hardships beside which those of our own generation are insignificant. They fought on. They saw beyond darkness to light. Foreign commentators who ridiculed visions of great commonwealths rising from the crude frontiers on which our forebears lived would, if they could return today, see the realization of the dreams of the men and women of Lincoln's age fulfilled beyond all expectation.

In prosperity, rejoice; in adversity, reflect. We need most of all seriously to think when misfortune comes upon us; for, it is by this means that we learn lessons of inestimable value which later we may use. The darkness of adversity falls on all lands. It is the belated shadow of a war in which the world burned up half its wealth. In some lands peoples steadiest by no faith grounded in no loyalty to enduring principle, have blindly plunged into chaos.

Let us not fail to hold fast to that which is good; or to comprehend the values we still have at stake. Imbued with some of Lincoln's loyalty and courage, let us stand true to Lincoln's principles; let us not fail in loyalty to leaders who in places of responsibility beset by danger and difficulty, are seeking to apply these principles to the solution of our National problems in the midst of "a world on fire."

U. S. EXPENDITURES ATTACKED BY CONGRESSMAN HOGG

Travel, Surveys and Employees Are Too Large Items House Is Told

(Special to St. Joe News.) Washington, D. C., February 9, 1932.—The first of many Appropriation Bills has started through the House of Representatives. Several days are required for each bill.

Voicing opposition in the House to the million dollar appropriation for the Chicago exposition Congressman Hogg of Indiana concluded, "My duty to the taxpayers of the Nation far surpasses my inclination to be generous. Lower taxes can only come by less expenditures. This waste must cease."

In support of his amendment to take $150,000 from the appropriation for surveying public lands Hogg said, "Much of this land has been surveyed several times. It is too barren to support life. Some of it is a great distance from human habitation, and some is above the timber line of the mountains." When questioned by Members from the Western States he quoted evidence from the Interior Department to substantiate his assertions.

The Indiana Congressman is attacking government expenditures for traveling. "Four million is claimed by the Agriculture Department," said Mr. Hogg, "and now the Interior Department is claiming one and one-third million for travel alone. These amounts are enough." Mr. Hogg told the House, "to take 25,000 men from New York to San Francisco and return in the finest Pullman coaches in the country."

John Adams was able to get along with 4,000 government employees. At the close of the Civil War there were 40,000. Today the government has more than 800,000. With the exception of postal employees the number ought to be reduced 50%," Mr. Hogg is giving close study to every item of expenditures and is presenting countless amendments and arguments in House debate for substantial reductions. Hogg is also waging a fight on useless printing and for reduction in the number of government commissions and employees.

TO LINCOLN— Staunch American

Man of simplicity, honesty and perseverance, Abraham Lincoln stands today as noble a character as America has ever seen. In his unflinching zeal, fighting for the principles he believed right and just, Lincoln won the love of an entire nation. In that same spirit let us all fight the good fight.

Americans Today Should Gain Courage From Story of Lincoln

By James E. Watson,
U. S. Senator from Indiana

We who live in Indiana have reason to be proud that in our State Abraham Lincoln grew from boyhood to manhood. Our fields and forests were his nourishing and cherishing influence. In our soil rest the ashes of the mother who bore him. Here, in the solitude of our forests and in the simple companionship of our pioneers, men and women strong of arm, of conviction and of faith his character was formed, his beliefs developed, his ideals fixed.

We know that throughout his life his memory often turned to this home of his youth. Many of the anecdotes through which he brought his wisdom to bear on vexing problems turned upon incidents of his life here. Long after he journeyed from Spencer County to the Illinois prairies and a wider theatre of action, he revisited the scenes of his boyhood. One of the few poems he ever wrote was inspired by this pilgrimage, breathing the melancholy he felt because of the absence of so many he had known.

We are passing through a National period of difficulty and distress, not unlike others of similar character; but which, if not checked by unfailing courage and unyielding patriotism, may threaten the very life of the Nation. At such a time we may well turn for inspiration to the career of this great man, so much revered, so much beloved, that his figure becomes legendary; and when now, as never before, every fact about him has become of supreme public interest.

While a youth in Indiana, Lincoln lived through a period of National depression that took on the proportions of disaster. Thomas H. Benton, the great Missouri Senator, in his work, "Thirty Years in Congress," declared that when he entered the Senate in 1821, commerce throughout the Union was paralyzed; there was no market for the farmers' produce; no employment for labor; and when the only sound of the hammer was that heard at sales by the sheriff of the property of ruined debtors. Currency was of uncertain value and much of it worthless. Mechanics were pleading for work on the unfinished Capitol at Washington at fifty cents a day or less. We know that paralysis of industry and agriculture touched even the far frontier on which the Lincolns lived; for an English traveler, journeying as far west as Indiana so recounts. In a book published upon his return to Europe, he set down the conclusion that the day had gone by when there was further opportunity for Old

Los Angeles Boy
Needed Help

Leroy Young, 1116 Georgia St., Los Angeles, is a "regular fellow," active in sports, and at the top in his classes at school. To look at him now, you'd think he never had a day's sickness but his mother says: "When Leroy was just a little fellow, we found his stomach and bowels were weak. He kept suffering from constipation. Nothing he ate agreed with him. He was fretful, feverish and puny."

"When we started giving him California Fig Syrup his condition improved quickly. His constipation and biliousness stopped and he has had no more trouble of that kind. I have since used California Fig Syrup with him for colds and upset spells. He likes it because it tastes so good and I like it because it helps him so wonderfully."

California Fig Syrup has been the trusted standby of mothers for over 50 years. Leading physicians recommend it. It is purely vegetable and works with Nature to regulate, tone and strengthen the stomach and bowels of children so they get full nourishment from their food and waste is eliminated in a normal way. Four million bottles used a year shows how mothers depend on it. Always look for the word "California" on the carton to be sure of getting the genuine.

King of Geysers

Maori Girls of the Hot Springs Country.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)—WNU Service.

W HILE most of the world's wonders are hoary with age, Waimangu, the world's largest geyser and one of the natural wonders of the world, has been spouting forth in the New Zealand hills for only three decades.

In the North Island of New Zealand, if you drive from Rotorua straight back through the scarred and roughened lava-strewn hills toward Mount Tarawera, that old volcano of such grim associations, you will come upon what appears to be a peaceful pond lying motionless in a depression among the hills.

Among its dreary and barren surroundings not a living thing is to be seen; the thin steam that rises gently from its surface and from the other pools nearby is the only sign of movement that breaks its stillness.

From the plateau in which it is sunk rise, in two directions, great rugged cliffs; and these form, as it were, a natural stadium in whose arena below is enacted at intervals one of the most marvelous and sensational spectacles which the natural phenomena of the world produce. For this is Waimangu, the largest geyser in the world, but a geyser whose action resembles far more the eruption of a great volcano than it does that of the slender jets of steam and water with which one usually associates the name.

When, in 1880, the appalling eruption of Mount Tarawera altered the face of the whole country, leaving in its path widespread loss of human life, destruction of villages and of millions of acres of cultivated fields, New Zealanders did not realize what a mighty landmark had been given them as compensation. They could only bemoan the loss of their famous pink terraces, which Tarawera had so ruthlessly torn from them, and they could not foresee the monument which was then set in course of construction to commemorate that terrible June night.

Explosion Was Tremendous.
For Waimangu, though it was undoubtedly formed by that great upheaval, did not at once make known its birth. For 14 years it lay quiet, slowly gathering power for the day on which it would first leap into action and proclaim its sovereignty.

Rudely, in 1900, the outburst came. The quiet pool which lies within its crater was stirred, steam rose from its surface, and with no further warning the very bowels of the earth, as it seemed, were hurled through it into the air in one tremendous explosion.

Two men prospecting for ore in that uninhabited region saw the eruption and brought back the news that Waimangu had broken loose. New Zealanders henceforth could boast the greatest geyser in the world.

It seems to have taken people of Rotorua some little time to realize that, from the erratic and wholly ungovernable character of Waimangu, a near approach to its crater must at all times be attended with the greatest personal risk; for, although the explosions were soon found to come at average periods of 36 hours, irregular eruptions were of frequent occurrence and took place without warning.

As is the law with all new dangers, somebody had to be hurt and sacrificed before steps were taken to prevent the ignorant and foolhardy from venturing too near.

In the summer of 1903 two girls and a guide visited the crater, and, though previously warned of the risk, they stood near the brink to secure a photograph at close quarters. An eruption occurred, the pond was thrown bodily into the air to a height of some 1,500 feet, with enormous quantities of mud, huge rocks, and steam, and the unfortunate visitors were caught by the back flow of the boiling water and swept down into the crater, from which the bodies were later recovered, terribly but unhurt and mutilated.

From that day the geyser basin was raised off in such a manner that nobody could approach near enough to incur the slightest danger.

Visit to the Geysers.

The road through the hills from Rotorua toward Waimangu leads over the most desolate country; in all directions only the lava-formed, rolling wilderness is to be seen. Occasionally one passes terraces of sulphur, silica and slum, where jets of steam or boiling ing mudholes further attest the volcanic nature of the land. So far as any natural, earthlike features are to be seen, one might be in the neither region.

Then, after scrambling up a steep hill to the westward of Rotorua, a superb view suddenly appears. A one's feet lie the azure surface of Lake Rotomahana, of such a blue as one sees portrayed and believes unreal, a turquoise in an old-gold setting, for the encircling mountains are bathed in sunlight and rise as tawny protectors of their charge below.

Grim and forbidding in the background stands Tarawera, passive now and smokeless, brooding over her dark deeds of bygone years, dreaming, perhaps, of the day when power would once more be given her to rise and strike the land with terror.

From the hill beside Rotomahana one descends to Waimangu's basin. The boiling pool which occupies the center of the crater, some 300 feet in width, is quite still except for the bubbles which rise to its surface and the thin steam drifting lazily upward.

Two explorers who passed the danger line, threaded their way carefully between the boiling springs, and then, climbing down into the crater, stood finally on the brink of the pool itself. They dared to remain but a moment in such a position, for although Waimangu had exploded during the night and was not actually due to work again for 36 hours, the thought of what would be their fate, should an irregular eruption occur, rendered the spot a peculiarly unattractive one and caused them to climb without delay back to the plateau, and on up to the cliff above the basin.

It was well that they did so, for scarcely five minutes had elapsed from the moment that they had stood within the crater. Their camera was pointed down for a photograph from the summit of the cliff and they had made an exposure. Then, even before there was time to change the plate, the surface of the pool began suddenly to seethe. The photographer heard his partner yell that Waimangu was "going off." His voice was quickly drowned in the fearful uproar that immediately ensued.

Like a Volcano.

Waimangu was in eruption. The formerly placid pond was shot, in one terrifying blast, into the air far above their heads—black water, black mud, black rocks; and, following them with the hissing of a thousand rockets and the roar of a thousand cannons, a burst of whitest steam quickly outstripped and enveloped the uprushing mass.

The explosion was awe-inspiring, terrible, grand beyond comparison. No more appalling, yet fascinating, spectacle can exist; no greater satisfaction can be experienced than to see such a phenomenon at close range. The sight is worth traveling thousands of miles over land and water to behold.

The outburst had taken place in the fraction of a second. Almost immediately they were pelted with the sand and small stones which fell, as the exploded mass shot back into its crater, causing them to take refuge in the shelter but provided for that purpose on the summit of the cliff.

In a moment all was over; the pond regained its usual placid surface and no sign, save the continued shower of sand, told of the mighty eruption which had taken place.

Waimangu, though the greatest, is by no means the only natural feature which renders New Zealand a wonderland of never-failing interest. As you approach Rotorua a strange, unearthly smell of sulphur fills the air; white puffs of steam rise, for no visible reason, from green hills and valleys; huge mudholes by the roadside seethe and bubble like porridge in a cauldron; hot lakes of extraordinary colors—yellow, blue, pink, green—and brilliantly colored strata along the mountain sides make you stare and rub your eyes to be sure that such apparent unrealities exist.

Your nearest conception of an orthodox hell will be truly realized when you enter Valley of Tikitere, some ten miles from Rotorua. The earth is hot beneath your feet, the country gases with steaming cracks, and if a cane is thrust a few inches into the soil a jet of steam or a spout of boiling water reminds you that, just beneath, the very bowels of the earth are seething toward the surface.

DAIRY
FACTSOPTIMISTIC VIEW
ON DAIRY OUTLOOKFeed Liberally, Is Advice of Colorado Expert.

"Dairymen can receive a comparatively good income from dairy cows this winter if they will feed the cows liberal rations of hay and grain." So states the November outlook report on the dairy situation prepared by the extension service of the Colorado Agricultural college and the Denver office of the division of crops and live stock estimates of the department of agriculture.

"In some sections where alfalfa hay is not available," the report continues, "the grain ration should contain some protein concentrate such as cottonseed meal and bran. Both are low in price at present."

"Butterfat prices will probably continue steady to stronger until the pasture season arrives next spring. The present volume of dairy production is expected to be maintained on account of relatively low feed prices, increased numbers of milk cows on farms, and a tendency toward further expansion."

In spite of a favorable cold storage condition, butterfat prices are low because of a decreased consumer demand, it is added. Although the number of dairy cows and heifers on farms in Colorado has shown little increase in recent years, the number throughout the country is the largest on record as the result of a gradual increase since 1921. There were 22,975,000 head on farms the first of this year, compared with 22,443,000 the year before and 22,049,000, the average for the past five years. This increase has been due to favorable returns from dairy products compared with returns from other farm commodities.

Heifers one to two years old that are being kept for milk increased from 4,175,000, the average for the past five years, to 4,675,000 last year, and 4,688,000 this year.

Must Have Protein in Ration for Dairy Cow

Protein is the expensive ingredient in most rations and it is essential that dairy cows have plenty of that substance if they are to milk profitably. As a source of protein five pounds of snapped corn would equal three pounds of alfalfa hay. On the other hand as sources of total digestible nutrients five pounds of snapped corn would equal eight pounds of alfalfa hay.

The following is a good grain ration for dairy cows: Ground snapped corn, 200 pounds; ground oats, 100 pounds; bran, 100 pounds; cottonseed meal, 100 pounds. This should be fed to cows in the proportion of one pound for every three and a half of four pounds of milk produced together with all the alfalfa hay that they will eat.—Nebraska Farmer.

Increasing Butter Sales

Surveys in rural communities in butter-producing areas such as Kansas, Iowa, Minnesota and Wisconsin, showed increased consumption of 20 to 30 per cent in localities where intensified educational work by the dairy council on butter has been done. A checkup of some territories, such as Tama, Iowa, in the spring of 1931, where an increase of 24 per cent in butter consumption had been secured, indicates that such results are permanent.

That these country results are widespread is indicated by a survey made by the department of agriculture of Iowa in the spring and fall of 1930 which indicated that in ten counties where dairy council work was done, selected at random throughout that state, the sale of butter had increased in like proportion.—Hoard's Dairyman.

Why Milk Flow Went Off

Drinking cups in the dairy barn of Floyd Van Meiter, Champaign county, Ohio, are worth $3.50 a month each. Last winter one cup serving two cows was out of repair 10 days. The two cows fell off 2 pounds of milk a day each. Mr. Van Meiter was getting 8 cents a pound for his milk. The milk flow was decreased 12 cents a day or $3.60 a month.

"The cups cost $4.80 apiece installed," said Mr. Van Meiter. "That means that it takes them just 40 days to pay for themselves, if you count 2 pounds a cow a day credit to the cups. I think they are entitled to more credit than that. I washed the two cows from a pail while the cup was out of repair. If the cows had had to go into the cold to drink I believe the drop in milk flow would have been twice as great."—Copper's Farmer.

Sire Proved Value

Those who attended the national dairy show at St. Louis last year had an opportunity to visualize the value of a production bred sire in a dairy herd. Six daughters of a sire owned by George W. Pope of Wisconsin averaged 15,522 pounds milk and 610.7 pounds fat. This was 2,185 pounds milk and 80.5 pounds fat more than was produced by the dams of these young cows. These animals were shown at the national dairy show last year.—Hoard's Dairyman.

COLDS

Some men and women fight colds all winter long. Others enjoy the protection of aspirin. A tablet in time, and the first symptoms of a cold get no further. If a cold has caught you unaware, keep on with aspirin until the cold is gone. Genuine aspirin can't harm you. Bayer Aspirin does not depress the heart. If your throat is sore, dissolve three tablets in a little water and gargle. You will get instant relief. There's danger in a cold that hangs on for days. To say nothing of the pain and discomfort Bayer Aspirin might have spared you! Get the genuine, with proven directions for colds, headaches, neuralgia, neuritis, rheumatism.

Measuring Atom's Movement

According to J. G. von Hevesy of the University of Freiburg, in Bretgau, all atoms are constantly in motion, even in solid metal. In an alloy of lead and gold, at a temperature half again as high as that of boiling water, the atoms wander through a space of a hundredth of a cubic inch in a day. In pure lead, however, moving about is not nearly so easy; in pure lead an atom can migrate in one day through a space of only two ten-billionths of a cubic foot.

It has to be pretty important when a majority of the people get mad about it at the same time and vote that way.

"The Thinker" Explained

Bobby was a sore trial to his mother because of his slowness in getting dressed. He never seemed to remember where he had put this and that article of apparel.

On one occasion he was taken to a museum where he saw a reproduction of Rodin's "Le Penseur." His mother explained that the title meant "The Thinker."

Bobby studied the figure intently for a moment, and then said, "He's probably trying to think where he left his clothes."

A man may need a slogan to keep from eating too much.

These thick, safe suds give whiter washes!

THERE are all degrees of whiteness. If you want to see the very whitest white that clothes can be—just try Rinso!

Rinso gives rich, creamy lasting suds even in the hardest water. Dirt loosens—soaks right out. Clothes come so white they don't need to be boiled. Even grimy cuffs and edges come snowy with little or no rubbing. Clothes last much longer!

Cup for cup, thrifty Rinso gives twice as much suds as lightweight, puffed-up soaps—it's so compact. And no softer needed! It's so safe, the makers of 40 washing machines recommend it.

Most Glorious of Professions

By FANNIE HURST

OUT of four brothers Myron Brown alone turned his face toward intellectual pursuit, or at least, he turned his face, at the age of seventeen, toward his state university, graduated there at twenty-one, and without any particular intent or purpose drifted into teaching. At twenty-five he was holding down the chair of English history in the university from which he had graduated.

His three brothers, thrown on their own resources at early age as he had been, drifted, the two younger ones, and the third his twin, into business pursuits that were ultimately to cast them all into the destiny of big affairs. Harold and Steve, the younger boys, struck it well in the radio industry while the vast industry was still in its infancy. Bartlett, Myron's twin, was reputed at twenty-five to be worth three-quarters of a million dollars from fortunate investments in copper.

The three brothers, successful all at an early age, were none the less proud of Myron. He represented the intellectual status of the family. He lent éclat and distinction. Had he permitted it, the three brothers would willingly and generously have aided and abetted his modest earnings as professor.

That, however, was not necessary. Myron's scale of life fitted and pleased him well. A pleasant suite in a boys' dormitory, where he incidentally held the position of dean. Varied if modest summer vacations, going tourist fashion to Europe, or camping in the north of Canada with two or three of the members of the faculty. Books: Good music from the second galleries of the concert halls. Pleasant leisure. Campus quiet. Mild intellectual diversion among the members of the teaching staff. All in all, there was little, in Myron's opinion, that his brothers could contribute to his well-being.

Then, too, there was this difference. The business boys had all married. There were three attractive and personable sisters-in-law, and five or six nieces and nephews in whom Myron felt a sort of benign impersonal pride. But the domestic aspect of the lives of his successful brothers helped to further estrange him from the walks they had chosen for themselves. Christmas, New Years and birthdays, they met. And on one occasion, more for the sake of quieting their importunings than anything else, Myron had accompanied, as guest, two of his brothers and their families to Europe. There acting as guide and interpreter to the cultural pursuits of the wives and children.

But in the main, Myron remained not necessarily aloof, for he was a gregariously inclined fellow, but more or less secluded among his own kind and the books that as the years marched on he was accumulating about himself in a modest library.

Then, one New Year which he was spending in New York where the annual gathering of his clan took place, Myron, stimulated by all the Wall Street gossip which he heard among his brothers, but which never was even intended for his ears, took what he called a flyer in a stock which he selected for the euphonious quality of its name.

He bought one thousand shares of Green Agate Copper stock for seven hundred and fifty dollars, took it home without even revealing the purchase to his brothers, who would have joked him, locked it in a desk drawer, practically forgot it until the next annual visit with his brothers, when once more, his interest stimulated for the moment by their banter and bull talk, he remembered his flyer in Green Agate.

Two days later, before his return to college, he sold his Green Agate, one thousand shares for twenty thousand dollars, creating among his brothers a furore of hilarity at his acumen. The shrewdness, they called it, of a babe in the wood.

It turned out to be more than that. With that twenty thousand dollars as his cornerstone, Myron was destined for a career in high finance that was far more spectacular than the career of any one of his brothers, even of his twin, who already was reputed to be twice a millionaire.

By the time Myron was thirty-five, his teaching career lay behind him as dim as a dream, and the library which he had accumulated in his home in Briarcliff-on-Hudson was estimated by itself to be worth as much as his brother Steve's or his brother Harold's entire holdings.

It was one of those spectacular, everything-he-touched-turning-to-gold successes. Myron simply made money hand over fist. In copper. In steamship stock. In General Motors. In hotel stock. In coffee. In real estate. Even in books, frequently achieving a first edition at high price, and turning it over with fabulous profit.

Strange, too, apparently temperamentally unfitted for the uncluttered, competitive race of the business world, he took to it as the proverbial duck takes to water. Business men, financiers, bankers, magnates, industrial captains found him quick, sympathetic, shrewd and eager to match his wits against theirs.

He was the surprise of their lives to his three brothers. He was more than that, he was apparently a surprise to himself, because more and more, as his fortune climbed and his authority in the business world became more established, Myron found himself too dazed, when he took time to contemplate, to quite realize what it all was about.

He was rich. He was influential. He was in a position to gratify his whims for travel, books, erudition, music, and cultural pursuits of any and all kinds. He was a person miles removed from the college professor, and yet at heart and soul he was that college professor, strangely endowed with a power which seemed to be no part of him.

It was not unpleasant. There was never a time when he found himself consciously hankering for the old days of the simple suite in the boys' dormitory where he had acted as sort of overseer of their conduct.

That was all passed now. The innocuous professor since those days had endowed the very university where he had taught English history with a library of books on that special subject, said to be the finest in the world, and it was more than possible that similar gifts from him would be forthcoming.

No, as Myron grew older and more influential and certainly richer, it could not be said of him that he entertained regrets for those simple teaching days that were gone.

Except, every time he made a noticeable disposition of his money, it found its way into college coffers. Dormitories for men. College libraries of one sort or another.

Then, when he was fifty-eight and reputed to be worth more than ten millions of dollars, Myron, unmarried, drew up his last will and testament. It was a simple will, because it diverted all this huge fortune in one direction.

Ten million dollars as a permanent fund to help keep the male teacher in that "most glorious of professions," by allowing him an income over and above his modest salary, and so make speculation and adventure into business as remote a possibility as might be.

Co-Operate With Child in Desirable Behavior

The child of today works with, rather than for, the parent in the matter of his own training, says Dr. Margaret Wylie, child guidance specialist from the New York State college of home economics.

Desirable behavior may result from other methods than the old one of demanding strict obedience. Today the parent, knowing that certain ways of behaving are necessary for health and safety, and social acceptance, tries to gain the co-operation of the child in developing them. The parent sees that the child understands what is desired, and that the child has an opportunity for self-expression and independence even while the child practices the necessary habits.

The old method established obedience without the child's co-operation, or desire, by a system of punishment. This resulted in undesirable behavior of a different type. The child became antagonistic, hard, and cruel; or rebellious and fearful; or took refuge in evasion and dishonesty. The new method makes it possible for the child to keep his self-respect in face and profit by his mistakes, and to gain independence, in self-control, and in personality.

The child's first lessons in co-operation are gained through his daily routine and through his play. Regular health habits, suitable companions, recognition and approval of desirable behavior, are some of the first ways in which the child learns what is good and what is not.

Dam to Fill Prince's Caves

With the raising of the waters of Loch Eicht, Scotland, by the dam of a large hydroelectric project the many caves said to have been used by Prince Charlie may be obliterated. It has also been disclosed that some of these "historic holes" are not authentic. At the southwest corner of the lake is "Clany's Cave," a cluster of boulders, where Prince Charlie hid during September, 1746. In Glenmoriston is another cave where the prince was sheltered by a faithful bodyguard. Both these places are well authenticated. On the west coast, however, is a hollow at the roadside near Kinlochmard, which has been called "Prince Charlie's Cave," and on the banks of the Shiel at Cliff is a similarly called "cave." Neither of these has any connection with the ill-fated prince. After Culloden Charles never crossed Loch Eicht.

Snuff "Dipping"

Snuff was used from the beginning, in America by the white settlers, the women "dipping" and the habit permeating all social grades. For the dipping, a stick about three inches long, and about as thick as a lead pencil was used. One end of this was chewed until the fibers separated, giving a brush-like result, which was dipped in snuff and held in the mouth, between the teeth and the cheek. Rather sloppy in general effect, but comforting to the nerves, we are told.

Origin of a Name

Downing street, in which the British prime minister has his London residence, was named after Sir George Downing, "a sinner with all times and changes, skilled in the common cant, and a preacher occasionally." Downing was sent by Cromwell to Holland as "resident" there. After the Restoration he espoused the king's cause, and was knighted and elected M. P. in 1661.

Lace Frock Repeats Its Triumphs

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

ALL through the winter style program the lace frock after noon and evening wear proved a favorite and now at the threshold of a new season the world of fashion is yielding to the lure of lace with renewed enthusiasm. With milder weather coming on and with the opportunity to wear tight garb which sunny winter resort environment presents, the fair for lace is taking on an outstanding significance.

It makes it the more interesting that the midseason and resort fashions reveal the use of so many kinds of lace. Furthermore, when one considers that not only party and afternoon frocks are scheduled to be of lace, but that jacket snits adorned all of lace are foretold in advanced Paris collections, one realizes that lovely and flattering lace is destined to play a very important role during the coming months.

Generally speaking, the new laces are divided into three classes, namely, cotton, wool and silk with some very attractive linen types also being shown. Alenconne and valenciennes are dividing honors in the cotton range, and they are as a rule of the most exquisite sort. A most beguiling effect and one which promises a program of lovely debutante gowns is valenciennes lace in dress widths. It comes in walks or in pastel shades. Many of the alenconne laces employed are also dyed, and if the dress is not entirely of lace, then this colorful and desirable fine mesh is worked in for yokes or for the popular contrasting bodice top. Some designers are showing black frocks topped with this sort of lace dyed perhaps a vivid green or red or deep pink or a delicate old rose.

The revival of Irish crochet lace is also a matter of comment. At a recent style display, a dress entirely of this type lace was greatly admired. It is said that for lingerie touches on the spring frock, Irish crochet will be very smart.

There is also a new variety called

ACCESSORIES MAKE BIG RUN ON METAL

Winter accessories are making a big run on metal. Handbags are, using wide bands of shining silver to finish off the flap of an envelope, or to construct the top. Imposing monograms, in gold or in silver, are featured impressively on street handbags.

The ever-present belt fastens more often with an important-looking metal buckle than with any other kind. Aluminum is making bracelets of assorted widths to wear with winter outfits. Metal buttons and Schiaparelli's metal clips are proving both useful and ornamental in dress and coat fashions.

Tiny metal clip pendants are featuring upon formal afternoon and evening slippers—metal clip heels on the latter. Many Rouff sponsors the return of old-fashioned conical buckles for shoes, made of silver, or of cut steel.

Nothing So Flattering as Magnificent Furs

Nothing is more luxurious or flatteringly becoming than magnificent furs or fur-trimmed coats and the rich velvets and laces that glorify our afternoon frocks.

Any woman becomes a figure of delight and romance when she wears, say a velvet coat with rich fur providing a soft frame for her face, a slim velvet frock and perhaps a cluster of snowy gardenias to set off the deep black of the velvet. And if she seeks color, surely the lame frocks and the lovely coats in brown, red or green offer ample opportunity for colorful attire.

Winter Sports Trousers to Be More Voluminous

Trousers for winter sports costumes will be more voluminous this season, but will keep a very neat waistline at the same time.

Many of the smart skiing suits just appearing at the big sport designers have the blouse buttoning on to the inside of the trousers, with a slim belt outside. Others have a belt attached to the bottom of the blouse and still others join the two garments with a slip fastener which keeps the waist terribly trim and trig.

angel skin lace. A suit fashioned of pink angel skin lace comes from the atelier of a French style creator. The jacket and skirt are somewhat tailored, a distinguishing feature being a spiral banding of dainty gray fur on each sleeve.

Favor for wool lace continues especially in glowing red tones. The lovely gown with the bertha collar developing into a cape effect at the back as shown to the right at the top of this picture is of ruby red wool lace. The soft undulating movement of the flare of the skirt accents a graceful silhouette.

Chantilly in delicate shadowy patterning is a foremost favorite when it comes to handsome silken meshes. Dresses of these filmy laces are often enhanced with charming scarf arrangements or by clever drop-shoulder treatments. The exquisite dress to the right below in the picture is just such as women of discriminating taste recognize at a glance as being exclusive. This charming model has a fish-like cape of the lace which lies in a generous soft bow at the front, at the same time that it achieves a quaint and lovely neckline. Taffeta cordings stiffen the tiers of the full skirt and the pelium.

Speaking of colorful effects, the handsome costume to the left is fashioned of almond green lace. The picturesque cape of lace is fur colored. It is designed to serve also as a dainty wrap with other dresses as it is detachable.

CHIC CAPE WRAP

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Cape wraps are the last word in Paris. This one is typical of those favored by the haute monde. While the original model was in bright blue the same style would be equally as effective in black or any color which would relate it to the dress with which it is worn. The inevitable trimming of white fur is accented on this beautiful evening wrap.

White Winter Hats

Paris says that even in town on wintry days, the white hat will be chic. Chenille, felt knitted wool, suede and velvet is used. One adorable hat of white is made entirely of closely matted feathers.

Utterly Feminine

A double row of net ruching is the unusual finish to the skirt of a recent velvet gown.

Lesson for February 14

JESUS AND THE MAN BORN BLIND

LESSON TEXT—John 9:1-41.

GOLDEN TEXT—Then spake Jesus again unto them, saying, I am the light of the world: he that followeth me shall not walk in darkness, but shall have the light of life.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Makes a Blind Man See.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Gives Sight to a Blind Beggar.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—What Jesus Did for a Blind Man.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Jesus the Light of the World.

I. Working the Works of God While It Is Day (vv. 1-5).

1. The disciples' problem (vv. 1, 2). In their minds all affliction, negative and positive, was God's retribution for sin. Therefore, they argued that this man's blindness proved his sin. They recognized also that the effect of sin is sometimes hereditary. The common philosophy of men about us today is that sickness, disease, and all sorts of calamities, is God's judgment for sin.

2. The Lord's answer (vv. 3-5). Jesus affirmed that in this case there was neither sin on the man's part nor that of his parents, but that it was an occasion for the display of the works of God and that he had come to execute this task while it was day because the night would come when no man could work. Since Christ is the light of the world, the task which challenged his attention was the opening of this man's eyes. The purpose of Jesus in working miracles was not a mere exhibition of miraculous power, but "to illustrate in the physical sphere his power in the spiritual sphere." It was illustrative of man's utter helplessness in his own salvation. The natural man is blind and dead (II Cor. 4:4; Eph. 2:1). God, by his Spirit, must quicken the soul dead in trespasses and sin before he can see to take hold on Christ, the remedy for sin.

II. The Man's Eyes Opened (vv. 6, 7).

1. The means used (v. 6). Jesus spat on the ground and made clay of the spittle and anointed his eyes. Observe that the means used in this miracle were a little less than foolish in themselves. The object must have been to show the man the utter inadequacy of the means to the accomplishment of the end, that he might be convinced that the power was of God.

2. His obedience (v. 7). He immediately obeyed. He did not stop to question the reasonableness of the command. Obedience only to that which seems reasonable is not obedience at all. He did not inquire as to what would be the result.

III. The Man's Testimony (vv. 8-38).

In his testimony we have a fine example of the development of faith.

1. He testified to his personal identity (v. 9). This was very easy. His self-consciousness enabled him to know that he was the same man who was born blind.

2. He testified as to how it was done (vv. 11-15). No definite was his experience that he was able to tell just how it was done.

3. He testified that the one who opened his eyes was a prophet (v. 17).

4. He testified that this healer no doubt was sent of God (vv. 30, 33).

5. He worshipped him as the Son of God (v. 38).

IV. The Results of His Confession.

1. As to the people, they were divided in their sentiment (v. 19). Some believed Jesus was from God because of his works. Others believed that he was a sinner because he did his work on the Sabbath day.

2. As to the man, they cast him out (v. 34). Faithful testimony will often result in ostracism from religious people, but there must be faithfulness.

3. As to Jesus, he found the man (v. 35). Being cast out by men, he found himself in the arms of Jesus. He was led on to a deeper faith. He first saw Christ as a miracle worker, then as a prophet, and finally as the Son of God.

This whole lesson may be viewed from three angles:

1. As an acted parable of a life that issues from faith in Christ. It is an illustration of the spiritual sphere in terms of the physical.

2. The testimony of the deity of our Lord. This testimony is fourfold:

a. The miracle itself an unheard-of work, that a man born blind should receive his sight.

b. The unwilling admission of the enemies themselves who made a public and official investigation.

c. The testimony of the man himself.

d. That of his parents.

3. An illuminating example of the development of faith.

SAGE REMARKS

Talk without action saps the will.

Example is the school of mankind.

Good is best when soonest wrought.

As the purse is emptied, the heart is filled.

If you wish your neighbors to see what God is like, let them see what you can make you like.

Mercolized Wax Keeps Skin Young

Get an extra and use up old stock. Fine particles of paraffin melt off all defects such as wrinkles, liver spots, tan and freckles disappear. Skin is then soft and velvety. Your face looks years younger. Mercolized Wax brings out the hidden beauty of your skin. The complete treatment can be done in five minutes. Mercolized Wax is sold in one-half pint and one-half gallon sizes.

Noise Absorber

Dr. S. Burton Sklar, who was born in Lithuania, but served in the World War as a captain with the United States signal corps, has invented and patented an instrument designed to abolish unwarranted noises in an auditorium or music hall. Also sounds are made visible by its vibrating diaphragm which controls a point of light shown on the screen part of the apparatus. The intensity of the tone can be seen by the wide, or narrow range of fluctuations.

Relic of Old Days

A striking relic of the old Comstock days was unearthed at Virginia City by Albert Dressler, of Berkeley, a souvenir hunter, when he found an imitation glass cigar five feet long that was used to advertise a famous cigar store 50 years ago. The device, forerunner of electric signs, was lighted with gas and is constructed of 15,000 to 20,000 glass prisms.

THE STORY

Hiram Butterworth, miser, decides to leave his fortune to Elmer Clarke, a poor young nephew. He tells Absalom McPeak, his lawyer, of a deal forty years ago in which he swindled a man out of $40,000, and arranges for payment with interest. Butterworth dies suddenly. Nellie Cathcart, Elmer's sweetheart, tells him his inheritance is more than a million. "Colorado Charley" and his partner, Mac, decide to pick Elmer. Unknown to Elmer, Nellie is the heiress of the man Butterworth swindled and she figures there is about $1,000,000 coming to her. Elmer becomes a candidate for school trustee. Posing as a newspaper reporter under the name of Doris Gatewood, Colorado Charley's confederate calls on Elmer. Nellie recognizes her the adventures type.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued

Elmer arrived in Pilarcitos too late in the afternoon to take Nellie to luncheon, and as he was due that night to conduct an initiation of a class of thirty neophytes into the local lodge of the Woodmen of the World, he had no opportunity of seeing her until noon of the following day. By that time, however, he had listened to enough buccolic badinage and impish queries regarding his gallantry in Los Angeles to realize that Nellie Cathcart must have listened to twice as much.

Consequently he was somewhat troubled of soul as he drew up in front of the bank and waited for Nellie to emerge.

She came, flashing him a radiant smile of welcome from the top step, where she paused to make deliberate appraisal of the new millionaire, his chauffeur and his new car. Elmer stepped out, opened the tonneau door and waved her in.

"Oh, boy!" Nellie murmured breathlessly and popped in. "Elmer, darling, it's gorgeous—so gorgeous that I'm grateful to be the second girl to ride in it first."

Nellie couldn't help thrusting that one home—and it went home, too. Elmer flushed and looked as guilty as a sheep-killing dog as he climbed in beside her. Well, there was but one thing to do and that was to tell the truth, shame the devil and let the chips fall where they might.

"Well, I'll tell you all about her," he began, but Nellie raised a menacing finger.

"Don't Elmer! It isn't necessary. You do not have to. I know you just happened to be riding along, you met her, she was walking, she recognized you and you just had to be decent and give her a lift."

"Well, have it your own way," he replied gloomily but bravely. "Only that wasn't the way. You see, I'd met her before. She's a newspaper correspondent, and she came up here to get a story from me on how it feels to be a poor man one day and a millionaire the next. She's a very charming girl and her name is Doris Gatewood. She's a correspondent for the American Weekly of New York. I happened to tell her I was going to Los Angeles to buy this car and she suggested that if I would telephone her she'd let me read her story before she mailed it east. I suppose she didn't want to write anything to which I might object."

"Oh!" said Nellie. "Did she write a nice, interesting story about you, Elmer?"

"I'll be hanged if I know," he confessed. "We forgot to look at it."

"Just as well you forgot, Elmer. She couldn't write a snappy, interesting story anyway. She's as spurious as a lead dollar."

"Now, how can you say such a thing about a girl you have never met?" Elmer challenged.

"Saw you walking down to the depot with her the night she was in Pilarcitos. Heard a fragment of her conversation. Heard her laugh. Noted her general make-up. That's all, but that's enough for little Nellie Cathcart."

"Well, I'll admit she isn't in your class, Nellie, but nevertheless I think she's charming. She's bulky company—so much so that I double-crossed you and gave her the first ride—after I'd promised you."

Nellie's gay, gurgling little laugh set him at his ease. "Now that I've made you suffer, dear, you may pick yourself up and dust yourself off. I'm not miffed at you, but I could kill a number of people in this town today."

"So could I. I wish I hadn't jumped into that campaign for high school trustee. You're all that keeps me from leaving this town and never coming back. I hope I get whipped to a frazzle in that trustee fight—honestly, I do."

Nellie's hand came over and rested on his. "You go in and win," she commanded. "The day I catch you dragging your tail in this community is the day you and I are going to have our first real disagreement. Leave Pilarcitos as often as you like and have a good time while you are away, but come back to Pilarcitos! When I begin to demand a detailed report on your doings it will be time for you to commence worrying."

"I don't think I could stand that," he confessed soberly.

Nellie laughed. "No man of spirit would. Where are you taking me for luncheon?"

"Out to Joe Angelotti's." "Well, Elmer," Nellie announced when they found themselves seated. "I've sold your house and lot on the terms you named. If you'll drop in at the bank after luncheon and sign the deed, I'll attest it and the deal will be closed in twenty-four hours."

"Three cheers!" said Elmer. "Nellie, you're a smart girl. When does the new owner desire to take possession of my house?"

"Immediately." "O. K. I'll take a suite at the hotel."

"Atta boy!" said Nellie. "Now let's talk about your campaign for high school trustee and organize that. I've been checking off votes, trying to estimate your probable strength, and it seems to me you have a fight on your hands."

"Watch my smoke," said Elmer Clarke.

Because he was so easy to handle Nellie favored him with a loving look and with difficulty repressed an impulse to lean across the table and kiss him. Dear, blind, straightforward, straight-thinking Elmer! All she had to do to hold him in line, was to show him a fight and then send him into it. He had been fighting and winning since his twelfth birthday—and it had never been an easy fight. His path had always been beset with obstacles, which he had successfully hurdled, but far down that path Nellie could discern one obstacle that must send him crashing to the ground.

Yes, nothing but death before he should reach that obstacle could save Elmer Clarke from having his nose rubbed in the dirt and Nellie had a vast curiosity to see how this man, who had tasted victory, would assimilate defeat, chagrin, sneers, gibes and the varied cruelties of a world which tramples joyously over the fellow who goes down in the fight. Standing alone, in a stricken field, would Elmer, defeated, acknowledge defeat?

"Why, Nellie, what are you crying about?" he demanded suddenly.

Nellie's sweet mouth trembled pitifully. "I—I can't tell you, Elmer. I'm just—silly, that's all. I—I haven't any spunk. Please forgive me—darling."

Elmer was delighted. Most men are when they think they have observed infallible evidence that the girl they love, but aren't quite certain of, evinces signs of jealousy. Poor Elmer thought she was jealous of Doris.

CHAPTER IX

That night Nellie sent a telegram to the editor of the American Weekly in New York, asking if their Los Angeles staff correspondent was Miss Doris Gatewood, and giving her address, which in the form of an anonymous letter had reached her that morning. She requested an answer collect.

She had it early next morning. "I thought so," Nellie soliloquized. "Only another buzzard gathering for the feast. Well, Elmer might as well learn about women from her. I wonder if she's an alimony hound or just a plain swindler. Well, a letter to the chief of police of Los Angeles, on the bank stationery, will receive prompt attention."

Nellie wrote the letter. Three days later she had her answer. It ran as follows:

"Dear Miss Cathcart:

"In response to your interesting letter of recent date:

"The circumstances under which the lady in question made the acquaintance of your friend appeared to me to present ample ground for suspicion—particularly in view of the fact that the gentleman has a considerable fortune.

"I therefore sent one of my most reliable men to investigate.

"He reports that the house at the address you gave me is inhabited by a notorious bunco stealer, known to the police all over the country as Colorado Charley. There is a young woman living there with him who passes as his sister, but who is an accomplice of his. She has a police record as the most accomplished come-on in the business, and is undoubtedly the person to whom you refer.

"We will keep them under surveillance. Meanwhile, if you should have any further information of importance to communicate to us, we shall be glad to co-operate with you.

"In closing, may I suggest that you do nothing to indicate to the young man that he is playing with fire? If we give this calf more rope we may be enabled to get him into the corral and earmark him.

"Very truly yours,

"J. Fitzgerald,

"Acting Captain of Detectives."

When Elmer called at the bank to sign the deed to his house and lot, he noted that the deed ran to Nellie Cathcart, an unmarried woman. "Hello," he murmured. "I see the buyer is hiding his identity by using you as a dummy. Why all the secrecy, Nellie?"

"No secrecy at all," Nellie replied demurely. "I am the buyer."

Elmer scratched his ear in perplexity. "What do you want of the property?" he demanded presently.

"It's a good buy, Elmer. I think I can sell it for about two thousand dollars profit in a year's time."

"Are you going to move into the house yourself?"

"No, Elmer. I'm going to rent it. Well, suppose you rent it to me for the present. It's all furnished with my furniture, and I'll be far more comfortable there than in that rat trap of a Palace hotel."

"The rental will be seventy-five dollars a month, Elmer."

"You're a highway robber!" There fell a silence while they looked at each other. Then: "How goes your fight for school trustee, dear?" Nellie asked.

"It's a fight—and I'm fighting. That's all I can say. I'm making a house-to-house canvass."

"In the new car?" He nodded. "Better use the old tin Lizzie," she suggested. "That shiny new monster will cost you votes. I heard a well-known merchant of Pilarcitos remark to Mr. Moody, apropos of your new imported car, that a fool and his money are soon parted."

"Well, I must be off, Nellie. I'm afraid I shall not be able to see you much of you until after the school election."

"Atta boy, Elmer!" As he strode out of the bank Nellie observed that, for the first time, he no longer walked with the slight limp that had been the result of an unexpected meeting with a soldier of the Prussian Guard. Once it had been a real limp; then it had become a habit; but now—

"Nothing like a little judicial prodding—nothing like a hint of opposition—nothing like an objective to be captured, to keep that boy busy," the girl soliloquized.

"Well, anyhow, he didn't fib to me about Doris Gatewood. He didn't apologize or explain or try to excuse himself—and that's a comfort."

True to his promise, Elmer saw little of Nellie during the period intervening before the school trustee election. He had a fight on his hands and he fought. The Sunday before the election he invited the entire high school district to a barbecue. During the barbecue he made the only public speech of his campaign. It was a rattling good speech and well delivered.

As usually occurs when an untrained speaker warms to his subject, Elmer's oratory suddenly captivated Elmer. Almost before he realized it, he had announced his intention of seeking the office of mayor of Pilarcitos, as an independent candidate, at the November election.

When Elmer stepped down from the table upon which he had made his speech, he knew he had won. In fact, he was elected by a majority of nineteen votes, and took office at the next regular meeting of the board.

Meanwhile the Pilarcitos Clarion had increased its circulation by one. Colorado Charley had subscribed for three months, on the off-chance that thus he might be kept in touch with the activities of his intended victim. As a result of his foresight, Elmer received a telegram from Doris Gatewood on the morning of election day, wishing him a tremendous victory and making the prophecy that any other issue would be improbable.

Elmer thought it was both kind and considerate of her to do this; consequently an hour after the votes were counted he sent her a telegram thanking her and announcing his victory. Immediately she replied with a night letter suggesting that he owed himself a present and that it ought to take the form of another visit to Los Angeles.

He reflected bitterly that in the days of his poverty no such unhappy ultimatum could possibly have been his portion. Also, he had a curious presentiment that Colorado Charley was going to borrow some money from him before long, and that he, Elmer, was going to grant the loan and, figuratively speaking, kiss the money goodby.

What with the happiness that was in the company of Doris, Elmer had not hitherto given more than a cursory thought to his other companion. Now his thoughts centered suddenly on Colorado Charley, who, by the way, was known as Hargreave Gatewood.

It occurred to him now that Harvey was a bit narrow between the eyes, a trifle furtive, a shade over-dressed, his affability and graciousness a fraction over-stressed. He talked too much and too big.

Elmer felt his suspicions mounting, even as the hackles of a dog rise as he lies asleep and dreams of rats. "If I should marry Doris," he decided, "I'll give Harvey the air about ten minutes after leaving the altar. He has Doris fooled, but fooling me isn't so easy."

African Gorillas Going Like American Buffalo

The gorillas of the British hills of Africa are dying out, principally from the ravages of big-game hunters who kill for the mere pleasure of it. The animals are given some degree of governmental protection in some parts of the African continent, but on account of the difficulties of guarding the country the protection does not amount to much. The Nigerian gorillas are somewhat larger, but are being decreased rapidly by the hunters. The natives, as a rule, are not in sympathy with the slaughter, for they regard the animals with friendly interest. It is only on rare occasions that they show any inclination to attack humans. The gorilla units confine their movements to certain well-defined limits, and they roam about the country harmlessly and quietly. As a rule they keep to the country, which is somewhat inaccessible, and make excursions into the inhabited portions only when driven there by the unfavorable conditions existing in the high countries. The native regard for these animals may be based upon superstition to a certain extent, and it is quite common for the native hunter to refuse to touch the pelts-brought to them by hunters.

Matters of Controversy

There is good reason for supposing that dogs, horses and other animals dream. The question is closely linked with another, namely, whether animals can think and reason. Both questions are still the subject of controversy among naturalists.

Old California

The Presidio of San Francisco was established as a military reservation by Spain on March 26, 1776.

As the Twig Is Bent

Children should learn to judge for themselves what is right and wrong, and to control their own acts. That in fact, is the highest level which most grown-ups ever reach.—Country Home.

entire accord. He told Nellie about it before he left and she agreed that he ought to go. When he told her he would probably see Doris Gatewood and her brother while there, she told him she hoped he would see the charming Miss Gatewood and that he might enjoy her society immensely. As a result of this conversation, Elmer departed not a little irritated. He would have preferred to have Nellie display opposition to his plan.

To say that Elmer enjoyed his vacation would, in these days of superlative slang, scarcely express the extent of his enjoyment. Perhaps it would be better to state that he ate it up. He lunched and dined and fox-trotted in every worth-while hotel, restaurant and road house in Los Angeles county, and then departed, accompanied by Colorado Charley and Doris Gatewood, for points farther south. They swam and played golf at Coronado, they lunched at delightfully wicked Tia Juana, and, at a bare suggestion from his guests, he ruined the paint on his automobile in a wild dash across the Colorado desert to spend a week at the Grand canyon.

Quite early in the history of the junket Doris commenced calling him Elmer and insisted that if they were to be good pals he must call her Doris. He did—gratefully.

Presently she took to calling him dear and darling and old thing and old dear and silly boy and sundry other verbal evidences of insanity. Elmer liked it. He "ate it up." In the gentle art of coquetry Doris Gatewood was a past master, and it is not to be marvelled at that he became hopelessly infatuated with her.

She thrilled him, she dazzled him, she brought on a delicious pain in his heart, she filled him with the wonder of her. When he thought of Nellie Cathcart it was with a pang of shame and trepidation, but even this unpleasantness gradually disappeared, exorcised by Elmer himself. Finding he could not think of Nellie without having his indescribable happiness clouded, he ceased to think of her at all, although he did send her a few picture postcards. She was but a memory of another life.

Nevertheless old habits, particularly of loyalty, are hard to break. Elmer was more than the devoted friend and host, but not quite the lover. He wanted to be but lacked the courage. Doris realized this and created opportunely after opportunity for him to declare himself. She even went so far, on their way back to Los Angeles, when they traveled by night to avoid the heat of the day, as to pretend to sleep with her lovely head on his shoulder.

Elmer trembled a little but that was all, so the lady took advantage of Colorado Charley's presence in the front seat with the driver to commence weeping softly; when Elmer asked her tenderly why she wept she told him it was because they had to part so soon. Thereupon she got her first real rise out of Elmer. He said:

"Well, I don't know about that!"

There is something connected with driving a fast and powerful car through the night which promotes straight thinking, and so Elmer came to the conclusion that he was violently in love with two women at the same time; he had to choose one, he knew which one he wanted, and he lacked the courage to choose her and jilt the other.

He reflected bitterly that in the days of his poverty no such unhappy ultimatum could possibly have been his portion. Also, he had a curious presentiment that Colorado Charley was going to borrow some money from him before long, and that he, Elmer, was going to grant the loan and, figuratively speaking, kiss the money goodby.

Sentimental Song Made Official Royal Melody

"Home, Sweet Home" is not the only operatic air that has become a kind of national melody, for France has a tune with words of a similar sentiment. This is "Où peut-on être mieux qu'au sein de sa famille?" ("Where can one better be than in the bosom of one's family?") It was written by Gretry as a quartette in his opera "Lucile" and first achieved a political position when it was sung at Versailles on July 15, 1790, when the Bourbons were turned out. It was also sung at Caen house when George III and Queen Charlotte paid their first visit to the prince of Wales and his bride in February, 1793, which possibly caused the homesickness of the princess and made the marriage an unhappy one, and again at Korymbia on the retreat from Moscow on November 15, 1812. It was adopted as an official royal melody on the restoration of the Bourbons in 1814.—London Mail.

The Trouble

Prof. I. L. Shaffman, political economy expert of the University of Michigan, speaking of the Hoover-Laval conference, told an anecdote.

"The trouble with the world is everybody knows just what the other fellow ought to do, but takes no thought about what he ought to do himself."

"I found a young bride absorbed in a dry-looking volume.

"What are you reading?" I asked her.

"An excellent thing," she said. "It is called Happiness in Marriage."

"What advice," I said, "does it give to wives?"

"I don't know," said she, "I'm reading the advice to husbands."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Preserve Historic House

A group of prominent citizens, organized as the Philadelphia Society for the Preservation of Landmarks, has bought the old Powell mansion. The house was used as a gathering place for the men who assembled in Philadelphia during the formation of the Republic. Washington is said to have attended many of the balls held there.

News Events of Interest to the Public
In General

Chapel Service

Tuesday morning, the chapel service was opened by singing "Love's Old Sweet Song." A talk on the Old Testament was given by Rev. J. O. Rose. High points were given such as the events of the giving of God's law through the prophets, for the Jewish nation. Finally when the whole world was at peace there was born in Bethlehem of Judea, Jesus Christ, the way, the truth and the life. Christ's religion was for all to accept. It was made plain that there is neither Jew nor Greek; neither bond nor free, for all are one in Christ. Rev. Rose delivered the benediction. Rev. Rose uses the same principals and material in giving the addresses here as he does in his college group.

The Juniors have been selling pop corn during the past week. Fresh, hot, buttered pop corn at three cents per sack. It is a very profitable business. The treasury has increased by three dollars.

The seventh grade had their Valentine party on Friday night, February 5, at the home of Miss Hollabaugh. All the members of the class were there, present also were Howard Williams, Dick Reed, Mr. and Mrs. C. G. Appleman, Miss Reed and Mrs. Clyde Hart. The members of the class are: William Allen, Thelma Bishop, William Bishop, William Erick, Alice Hart, Robert Hollabaugh, Dorothy Keller, John Franklin, Roy Hensley, Loren Dale Laub, Betty Jane McClellan, Marcella Moore, Roy Shilling, Charles Washler, Dallas Zimmerman, Irene Williams, Earnest Kelley, Gladys Maurer. Prizes were won by Dallas Zimmerman for a scrambled heart contest; by William Erick for a word contest, and by Robert Hollabaugh for a bean contest. After the games, refreshments of ice cream and cake were served and the Valentine box was opened. All departed at ten o'clock, having enjoyed a pleasant evening.

Absences last week were many, due to colds, flu, and attendant illnesses.

Thomas Farnier, a former resident of this place, died on Sunday morning of paralysis at the home of his brother, Iven Farnier, of Butler. Mr. Farnier was taken sick at the Charles Gibbons home east of town, but was taken three weeks ago to his brother's home. Mr. Farnier leaves several brothers and one step daughter, Mrs. Rilla Goldsmith of this place. The funeral was held Wednesday afternoon at 1:00 o'clock from the Methodist Church at this place. Interment in White City cemetery.

Mrs. Cleo Reed very pleasantly entertained her Sunday School class of young people at her home on Thursday. At this time the class organized with officers as follows: President, Florence Steward; vice president, Lynn Fisher; secretary-treasurer, Alice Baker; assistant, Edith Wade; assistant teacher, Mrs. Elsie Fisher. There were twenty-three members present. They also chose a class name, "Up Streamers." The regular meetings will be held the first Thursday evening of each month, the next meeting being held at the home of Mrs. Emily Gloyd. Contests were won by Lynn Fisher and Homer Stemen. The guests present were Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Wade and James Reed.

LINCOLN

Abraham Lincoln represented qualities which we consider outstandingly American. He was a practical idealist. His faith in the principal of freedom and his consistent fight to maintain it won him a perpetual place among the world's immortals. There is, today, a stringency, a restriction in the free flow of money. Let us face it with the same perseverance as Lincoln faced his problems. America today has a condition of saving which amounts to hoarding. It is not conducive to healthy business, wages, employment or investment. We can struggle out of this slavery to fear by saving sanely, buying wisely.

HATS OFF TO THE RAILROAD MEN

One of the biggest things that ever happened in the United States, from an industrial standpoint, is the decision of the unionized forces of our railroads to take a 10 per cent wage reduction, effective at once and to be in force one year.

For the first time in history, presidents of the railroads and the heads of the labor organizations sat down at a conference table and worked out a wage agreement based on the plain facts involved, without threats of strikes or arbitrary action on either side. Lawyers were used only to help word the articles of agreement.

David B. Robinson, an ex-fireman, who rose to the head of his own brotherhood and then to leadership of the entire railroad labor structure, made it clear that in singing away part of their pay at this time, the workers were not accepting the theory that such reductions, "are to be regarded ordinarily as the appropriate means to promote prosperity." He pointed out that the men recognized the present unparalleled situation affecting both the railroads and the public, and said: "In the hope that our action may improve the health of our industry, may improve the cooperative relations of management and employees, may stimulate revival of business and may advance the general welfare, we have decided to accept the proposal."

Thus, railroad labor executives have established a new precedent in settling a problem of industry. This is an outstanding step toward stabilizing business conditions in the United States and its effect will be far-reaching.

CHURCH BELLS TO RING ON MORNING OF FEBRUARY 22

The ministers of all churches of DeKalb county have been requested to have their church bells peal forth 200 strokes, with an intermission of five seconds between strokes, at 10 o'clock the morning of Monday, February 22, in commemoration of the birth of George Washington. This is the approximate hour of his birth. The letters to the preachers were sent out by Judge Endicott in line with a nationwide movement of the Indiana George Washington Bicentenary commission and if any of the pastors did not receive such a letter they are asked to consider this their notice.

HOME BUILDERS CLASS ENTERTAINED

Mr. and Mrs. Estel Coburn entertained at their home on Tuesday evening, members of the Home Builders Class of Coburn's Corners Church. At an early hour a bounteous pot luck lunch was served to which all did justice.

After a short business session the entertainment committee took charge and entertained with a question and answer contest and a mock trial which was enjoyed by all.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

In as much as Nellie Shull Wise, who passed from this life January 1932, was a charter member of the Home Builders Class of the Coburn's Corners Sunday School, it is the desire of the class to honor her memory.

First, by expressing to her immediate family and parents the high esteem in which she was held by the class.

Second, by placing on the wall near the class banner, for one month, a bouquet of home grown straw flowers, symbolic of a life well spent in this community, the beauty, fruits, and memory which will live on indefinitely after the flower itself has been plucked from the soil in which it grew.

Third, by recording these resolutions in our Secretary book so that they may be referred to as long as this class remains an organization.

STOLEN PROPERTY IS FINALLY LOCATED

Confessing they stole two kits of wrenches, two St. Joe youths, Don Hart and Harry Laux, were lodged in the county jail Saturday by Sheriff John P. Hoff and his deputy, Herbert N. Grimm.

The wrenches, numbering 40 or 50 and valued at more than $125, were used by the Tri-Lakes Construction Co., of Columbia City, in the paving of the St. Joe-Spencerville road last June. A tool shed was left unlocked one night and the two kits of wrenches disappeared.

Hart and Laux were under suspicion for the theft and the officers, armed with a search warrant, went to the Hart home in St. Joe Saturday morning. Don admitted at once that he had the wrenches hidden in the cellar and surrendered them to the sheriff.

Hart is twenty-one and single. Laux is only twenty-two, but has a wife and three children, having been married at seventeen. He was located at the home of his father northeast of St. Joe and he also confessed.

The youths will probably be arraigned before Judge Endicott Monday.—Star, Saturday.

Don Hart and Harry Laux, of St. Joe, arrested Saturday for stealing two kits of wrenches from a tool shed along the St. Joe-Spencerville road last June, entered pleas of guilty to petit larceny when arraigned before Judge Endicott Monday. Their cases were taken under advisement while their records are being investigated.—Star, Monday.

WITH OUR CLUB LADIES

The Ladies of the Culture Club entertained their husbands at the country home of Huldah Reasoner, Wednesday evening, February 10th.

As each guest entered the door the hostess pinned a heart, inscribed with an appropriate name, on their backs. They were then ushered into the living room which fairly glowed with Valentine decorations. The "heart" trees at either end of the room received much admiring inspection and comment.

Immediately after the guests were assembled the entertainment committee, Floy Smith, Anna Sechler, Pluma Hamilton, Hazel Hanna and Mayola Kinsey, took charge and had them sing three "get together" songs accompanied by Mayola on the harmonica. Then Grace Sheffer and Mayola Kinsey played a duet on the mandolin and harmonica.

Then each of the guests were given pencil and paper on which they were to write the name and "pseudo" name of every one present. Bogus money was then passed to each one, with which they were to buy the privilege of seeing the names pinned on their backs. They were told that at the end of the evening there would be a check up on the individuals as financiers.

Hazel Hanna then conducted a clothes pin contest and the naughty husbands used their money to bet on the result of the contest. The excuse they gave was that Hoover disapproved of hoarding and they proposed to put their money in circulation.

Next was a "Speed the Hoop" contest which proved to be a supreme test of the speed and agility of the guests.

Following this was a "Candy Colloquy" which afforded much merriment, especially when one of the gentlemen took his "heart" seriously and surprised his partner considerably.

After this came a "Seed Contest" which proved that though we may profess to know our vegetables we are not so "hot" when it comes to recognizing the seeds.

For the next hour the game of "Bingo" held sway and was greatly enjoyed by both the players and the "ballyhoosers."

The guests were then invited upstairs, there they helped themselves to the fruit of the "heart" tree and thus found their partner for supper. They were then taken to the dining room where a buffet supper was served by Dorothea Kessler, Grace Sheffer and Kate Bowser.

With well filled plates the guests marched back into the living room and were seated at small tables.

Following the supper a check up on the financiers gave the prize to E. R. Kinsey.

Toward the "wee wee" hours forty guests departed, expressing their appreciation to the two committees, whose work had afforded them so much pleasure.

A birthday surprise was given Mrs. Emma Freeburn at her home Monday evening, when her parents, Mr. and Mrs. John Wineland, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Dorsey, D. B. Ridgway and family and Maurice Hollabaugh and wife, all went in on her. A good time was had by all.

My Neighbor Says:

If a cake falls in the center when baking it is very possibly due to the fact that the oven door was opened too soon after the cake was put in. In the case of a sponge cake the door should never be opened during the first 20 minutes.

Apple butter is best when served with hot muffins or biscuits, as well as with hot rolls.

Evergreens should be planted early, by the middle of October at the very latest. If the weather is dry at time of planting dip the roots into a thick mud paste before planting, but it is not necessary if the season is wet. Evergreens do not require much attention after planting except that they must not be allowed to become dry. They should be kept watered up to the time of freezing.

The Kitchen Cabinet

DAINTY LUNCHEONS

THERE is nothing more appetizing, satisfying and attractive than a pair of well made and garnished sandwiches with a cup of hot coffee. The following is one that will provide a substantial meal:

Sandwich Ensemble.—Arrange sliced chicken on toast, spread with mayonnaise, cover with a slice of tomato with a thin slice of fried ham and then with a sautéed slice of pineapple. Cover with toast.

Crab meat or tuna seasoned with lemon juice, salt, pepper and a touch of tabasco used for sandwich filling is especially good with a salad. Baking powder biscuits toast so well that they make very nice sandwiches. Creamed chicken sandwich is so well known that it need not be stressed, but used with baking powder biscuit, a salad and a hot drink, one has a fine meal.

Another very good sandwich is prepared with hard cooked egg, chopped chicken liver, mixed with mayonnaise, a bit of prepared mustard and spread on whole wheat bread, then sautéed in a little butter until brown on both sides.

For a cool night, prepare hot toast, add a slice of tomato, cover with cheese, seasoned with a bit of Worcestershire and chili sauce and serve hot with curls of bacon.

Men as a rule like sandwich fillings with snap and tang, so more seasonings should be used, especially when served hot.

Vegetable stocks, apples and gelatin may be used as tops for open sandwiches, garnishing with chopped nuts, fresh chopped green or red pepper, bits of other cooked vegetables such as peas.

There is a wide range of seasonings for hot or cold sandwiches. With the bottled sauces, mushroom, walnut, chili and others well known, there are chopped olives, capers, green and red peppers, parsley, cress and mint.

HOW IT STARTED

By JEAN NEWTON

"MEN IN HIGH PLACES"

IT WOULD be safe to say that few of us, unless we had an inkling of the truth, could accurately surmise the actual beginnings of this phase of "Men in High Places" which today is an allusion to people occupying important positions.

But how different was its original usage and its original significance!

For in the beginning the so-called "high places" were held in dishonor and disrespect by those who used the expression—the Israelites of their neighbors—the "high places" referred to being the hilltops where "men went to worship strange gods."

Such were the original "high places" upon which shrines were erected—this being a custom which was widespread in ancient times, arising undoubtedly out of the belief that the tops of hills brought the worshiper that much nearer to his god.

Chip Off Old Block

Bobby Britton, the sixteen-year-old son of Jack Britton, former welter-weight champion of the world, stepped right into the professional boxing field and has already won five fights. Under the tutelage of Jack, the youngster is rapidly becoming a master boxer, and may be expected to make an assault on the world's flyweight title.

There can be individuals who do not want so much of "success" as to make life a treadmill.

Island Bird Sanctuary

St. Kitts, a lonely island some seven miles in circumference off the outer Hebrides, has been sold by the former owner, Sir Reginald MacLeod, to an ornithologist who wishes his identity to remain hidden. This buyer plans to keep the island in its natural state so it may remain an ocean sanctuary for the sea birds which migrate there in great numbers. Under the terms of the proposed plan it will be possible for tourists to land and visit the huge island aviary, but no buildings will be placed on the land.

Lioness Followed Girl

Escaping from her cage in Earl Shilton, England, Zouita, seven-year-old lioness, quietly followed a crowd of well-fed girls just returning from dinner to a hosiery factory. The girls scattered, but Zouita raided a vegetable garden and was captured later in the factory yard.

GREAT THINGS EXPECTED OF THIS AIRPLANE

Workmen in Paris putting the finishing touches on the stratosphere airplane invented by M. Guerdais. It is not constructed to fly in ordinary aeronautical lanes but in the rarier stratosphere nine miles above the surface of the earth. The inventor believes the new plane will be able to attain a speed of 250 miles an hour. A specially built cockpit protects the pilot.

One of the station masters at Grand Central has a side line. He owns a gasoline and oil business on the Boston Post road, and he tells me that trade is poor. Motorists who used to pull in and say, "Fill her up," now count their gallons. They buy just enough, apparently, to get home. Many ask whether they cannot open a charge account, but the station master's son, who runs the business in his absence, has strict instructions to do only a cash business. The only exception to this rule, queerly enough, are young men who look like college boys. They usually pay the next time they go by but, just to be on the safe side, the gas man takes their license numbers. Some drivers have ten gallons of gas put in the tanks and then say they have forgotten their pocketbooks. "That is all right," says the gas man. "Just leave your spare tire." If they drive away without doing so, he just telephones a police box down the road, and they come back. Then they usually discover some money. The station master says the funny thing about the whole affair is that most of the motorists are driving good looking cars, many of them new.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

A letter from Frank Hartman, editor of the Republican in Farmington, N. M., says that he once went to school in Pleasant Hill, Mo., with Frank Trumbull, later head of the Colorado Southern & Michigan Central railways. "I first met Frank Trumbull in Venice. I had preceded him up through Italy and the tourist agencies and hotels used to get our mail hopelessly mixed. We had a very pleasant time together, but never could discover that we belonged to the same branch of the family.

The history of depressions in the United States appears to be that they last about three years, with nine fairly fat years in between. Those of us, therefore, who are still around in the early 1940s may be expected to go about asserting: "Frank! You don't know anything about a panic. You are too young to remember 1931."

When Helen Morgan was in Havana, the movie people decided it would be nice to take a little shot of her buying something in a department store. They did not care which store, but the managements of the two largest stores in Havana cared a lot. They were firm in the belief that if Miss Morgan went on the screen in a store, the particular emporium made a lot of difference. The contestants turned Miss Morgan's suite at the hotel into a verbal battleground. Neither she nor her mother understood Spanish, but they could perceive that the argument was bitter. The battle was at its height when Evelyn Kelly, an old friend of Miss Morgan, arrived. Not only could she understand Spanish but it appeared she had taken a temporary job in the older of the two palaces of merchandise. That turned the scales of war. Miss Kelly's store won in a walk, at the end of which the picture was made.

Miss Morgan's only bet in Cuba was to the extent of a peseta. She lost it, and, not knowing how much a peseta might be, proffered a dollar in settlement. To her surprise, she got 80 cents in change.

Small boys in New York have a habit of jumping up on the back of taxicabs and going for a ride. They get on when the traffic stops for a red light, but the cars run so fast between lights that they have to wait for the next halt to get off. As the taxis begin to slow down, the kids leap gaily from their perches, seldom looking behind them. We always wonder why they don't get killed, but never yet have seen one hurt.

The Children's Corner

EDITED BY DOROTHY EDMONDS

The Game of What Do You See

Cut out the chart of pictures given here and mount it on a piece of cardboard. The players sit in a circle and the chart is placed in the center, covered over. The captain counts three, uncovers the picture chart, counts fifteen and covers it up again. Each player must write down a list of the things he remembers seeing in the picture. The one who remembers the most wins.

Fun With Stamps and Seals

Betty and Bobby were making gifts. They had collected all the stamps and seals they could find in the house, old ones and new ones, but all of bright colors. Betty found a tin marshall box, some empty mayonnaise jars; Bobby brought a small wooden box and a large pasteboard box such as dresses come in, and then Mother gave to the fun a picture for which she said she wanted a frame.

The pictures here show you all the nice things the children made and the directions will tell you how.

A Photograph Frame—A piece of cardboard several inches larger than

A Vase—Empty mayonnaise jars, washed clean in warm water, and seals pasted in a little side design and two borders as shown in the picture.

A Lamp Shade—A piece of very heavy paper, oh, very heavy, cut into a half circle first and then a half circle cut out of that, with seals pasted at top and bottom and the whole pasted together to make a perfect shade.

A Blotter Pad—Made from the large pasteboard box that Brother Bobby found, the flat part of it, neatly trimmed of all rough edges, with corners of heavy paper pasted on each corner underneath each side to form a little pocket, into which the blotter could be slipped. Each of these pockets are to be covered with pretty seals.

A Pencil Box—This is made from the wooden box (cigar box, perhaps), prettily covered with seals on the outside only.

CHILD need REGULATING?

CASTORIA WILL DO IT!

When your child needs regulating, remember this: the organs of babies and children are delicate. Little bowels must be gently urged—never forced. That's why Castoria is used by so many doctors and mothers. It is specially made for children's ailments; contains no harsh, harmful drugs, no narcotics. You can safely give it to young infants for colic pains. Yet it is an equally effective regulator for older children. The next time your child has a little cold or fever, or a digestive upset, give him the help of Castoria, the children's own remedy. Genuine Castoria always has the name:

Hospitality

Host—What a pity you have come so late. My wife has just cleared away the tea.

Son of Host—Yes, and in her hurry she nearly broke a cup.

Very new indeed and very smart are the huge square scarfs of chiffon wool made of different colored squares put together so that they resemble signal flags. There are belts to match. They are grand to wear with fur coats.

If you just must have a new frock to wear under your winter coat, then select something you can wear intermediately without that coat. A dress that has the earmarks of a coat dress is the thing to choose, and see to it that this dress is in a springlike color and fabric. Silk serge that looks like wool or wool serge that looks more like satin would be the smartest choice for such a frock.

Self-control is the highest discretion.

ENTERTAIN THE MEN

The Woman's "Faith Class" of the Lutheran Sunday School entertained the Men's Bible class Saturday night at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ray Reasoner.

A bounteous supper was served at 6:30 on small tables set in the spacious living room.

With considerable noise and merriment the thirty-two men and women obtained partners for supper in an unusual way, arranged by the hostess.

After the supper a short program was given and then Mrs. Frank Curie, Mrs. Reasoner and Roy Wade provided an evening's entertainment of patriotic games and contests.

At a late hour the guests departed after thanking Mr. and Mrs. Reasoner for an evening of good fellowship spent in their beautiful home.

WHAT DEKALB COUNTY FARM WOODLANDS YIELDED IN '29

Many of the county people will be surprised to learn just what the farm woodlands in DeKalb County yielded in the way of income in one year, 1929. According to the U. S. Census Report recently issued, the harvest was as follows: 617 thousand board feet of lumber; 17,506 cords of firewood; 7,252 fence posts; and 102 poles and piling.

It is rather difficult to figure the value of these products because many of them were used by the woodland owner. But figured at the common market price at that time, the total value of these products to these DeKalb County woodland owners was about $4,162 dollars. In addition, 40 farms produced 1,258 gallons of maple syrup and 283 pounds of sugar.

This is quite a sizeable income to receive in one year from the one portion of these farms—the one crop—which, in most cases, has received no care and cost only the annual tax on these acres.

The woodlot is the only portion of a farm that produces a crop without care, fertilization or cultivation. In seasons of drought or excessive rains, it keeps right on growing. Late or early frosts or the severest winter weather seldom injure it. When all other crops fail, the farm woodlot carries on its job of producing wood. And though the owner slashes it to pieces with careless and wasteful cutting, this one crop comes right back for more.

Certainly a crop that will do this deserves encouragement and better treatment than many owners are wont to give it. All it requires is protection against fire and grubs, and a little more care in cutting operations. Woodland owners, who wish to secure information on the care of the woodlot, can get in touch with T. E. Shaw, extension forester, through the office of County Agent Myers.

It is a telling commentary on political chicanery, that at a time when employment and depressed business are driving up the government's source of support, public officials are preparing and delivering attacks on basic industries. A parallel illustration would be for a person to poison the well upon which he depended for water.

L. F. Cooper, secretary of the Wittenburg Brotherhood says: "The March meeting will be held at the church at Coburntown, the oldest established church in the county, on Wednesday evening, March 9th. Everyone, whether member or not of the men folk are extended an invitation and urged to come and enjoy the good time we know is in store for all who may be able to attend. This church is located directly south of Butler nine miles with good roads available from most any direction. The president, Mr. Fetter, together with his various staff officers and committees assure you a welcome at the March meeting. ## The Nation's Greatest Son

This portrait of George Washington, highly prized possession of Marshall Solberg, Chicago, is claimed by him to have been painted by Gilbert Stuart. It bears the year 1784, and is signed by the master in an inconspicuous way. Some have thought that the earliest "Stuart Washington" was painted in 1780, but such is not the case, for John Jay gave Gilbert Stuart a letter to Washington which Stuart delivered while congress was in session in the year 1784 and Stuart refers to this in correspondence with relatives. It was then that one of the three sittings occurred. There were many portraits of George Washington painted by Gilbert Stuart, but there were only three sittings, so that many of the portraits were copied by Stuart from either completed pictures or sketches. It was, of course, not entirely unusual for great painters to make preliminary sketches of their subjects, although they did on many occasions entirely complete their paintings at sittings. This latter procedure was followed, it is thought, by Gilbert Stuart in this portrait. If this is so, it stands unique among the "Stuart Washingtons." According to a volume in Mr. Solberg's library, Gilbert Stuart admired this picture so much that he retained it himself and would not part with it for many years thereafter. When it landed in the hands of Congressman Gilbert of western New York he loved it so much that he asked that it might be the last object for him to gaze upon in this life.

Washington, Man, Patriot, Statesman

COURAGE, physical and moral, was a part of his nature; and, whether in battle or in the midst of popular excitement, he was fearless of danger and regardless of consequences to himself. (Sparks, Jared—The Life of George Washington, p. 458.)

At all times and amid all conditions Washington rang true to the note of a splendid manhood. Hypocrisy and a trafficking in expedients for popular applause no more match with his life than the crime of murder. He had little of the captivating style of speech or manner, but regard for the nobility of his character, rather than any rhetorical art or charm of personal address on his part, kept wavering lines from retreat in battle and from mutiny amid privation suffering to which our neglect had exposed the soldiers of the Revolution. (Underwood, Oscar—The Career and the Words of Washington, p. 12.) (State Society of Cincinnati, Philadelphia, Pa., February 22, 1912.)

His Personal Triumph

Then came the horrors of Valley Forge and of the winters in Morris county. Those were the days when desertions were many and enlistments were few, when Washington dared not give open battle and there was hardly left to him a place for retreat. Then came the Conway conspiracy, and the ambition of Gates, and the cowardice of Lee and the treason of Arnold, and a series of persecutions so petty, so bitter, so malignant, that it is amazing how Washington survived them. Then, too, came defeats like that at Brandywine, and battles of uncertain meaning like that at Monmouth. . . .

It is easy for us as we read these events in the light of the issue to keep up our courage and understand the triumph that finally came, but it was a very different thing for Washington. Congress was weak, meddlesome, and vacillating. The soldiers were raw, undisciplined and sometimes mutinous. There were jealousies and libels and forgeries and slanders almost beyond our present ability to believe. . . .

When I recall Washington's calmness in the midst of exasperating annoyances, his unselfish loyalty when surrounded by enmity and jealousy and hatred, his faith that put courage into the hearts of men who marched hungry and left bloody footprints in the snow; when I remember how after eight years of this and more he emerged victorious, as calm in victory as he had been serene in defeat, I do not wonder that Frederick the Great is said to have pronounced George Washington's campaign in the Jerseys the most brilliant in military annals. (Barton, William E.—George Washington.)

Shared Men's Sufferings

Washington did not leave his men and go home to live in luxury, but stayed to endure privation with them. Only he who reads his letters written during these trying times can appreciate his troubles and anxieties. (McLaughlin, Andrew C.—History of the American Nation, p. 168.)

Behold him (George Washington) in 1775 taking leave of his family and his home, and hastening to the relief of a distant and then unknown part of America. See him transforming and cementing a band of rustics into an army. Follow him to the field of battle, and see him first in danger and last out of it. Go with him into Valley Forge, and see him sharing the hunger, the cold, the fatigue of every soldier in the camp. Was there ever such fortitude in adversity? Was there ever such moderation in the hour of victory? (McMaster, John B.—History of the People of the United States, Vol. I, p. 465.)

Washington's Victory

On only one point did there seem to be unanimity and accord. That was that the dogged prosecution of the war and the ultimate victory must be credited to George Washington. Others had fought valiantly and endured hardships and fatigues and gnawing suspense, but without him, who never wavered, they could not have gone on. (Thayer, William E.—George Washington, p. 128.)

The American revolution from a military point of view was a group of little wars rather than a single war. The one integrating force was the person of the great commander, but George Washington held the army and the cause together by his exhaustless patience and courage rather than by any comprehensive plan of war. (Murray, David S.—History of the American People, p. 190.)

WASHINGTON'S ARMS

To Washington no duty, however obscure, was unimportant, and no deviation from duty, however trifling, was possible. (Hoar, George F.—Washington, p. 81.) (Chicago, February 23, 1908.)

Put Patriotism First

Washington was an incorruptible patriot. He was one of the few rich men who was not a Tory. A very large proportion of men of large means sided with the British crown; nor must we too hastily condemn them. But Washington, who had more to lose than almost any other man in the thirteen colonies, was not blinded by vested interests, nor bound to conservative action by his wealth and station.

For the sake of the country which he loved he suffered innumerable hardships, was stung by ingratitude and hurt by slander, but he stood firm in his loyalty to the cause he had espoused, and was faithful to the end. (Barton, William E.—George Washington.)

There is a life that is worth living now, as it was worth living in the former days, and that is the honest life, the useful life, the unselfish life, cleansed by devotion to an ideal. There is a battle that is worth fighting now, as it was worth fighting then, and that is the battle for justice and equality. To make our city and our state free in fact as well as in name; to break the rings that strangle real liberty, and to keep them broken; to cleanse, so far as in our power lies, the foundations of our national life from political corruption, and social corruption; to teach our sons and daughters, by precept and example, the honor of serving such a country as America—that is work worthy of the finest manhood and womanhood. . . .

The well educated are those who see deepest into the meaning and the necessity of that work. Nor shall their labor be for naught, nor the reward of their sacrifice fall them. For high in the firmament of human destiny are set the stars of faith in mankind, and unselfish courage, and loyalty to the ideal; and while they shine, the Americanism of Washington and the men who stood with him shall never, never die. (Van Dyke, Henry—The Americanism of Washington, pp. 70-72.)

Man of Firm Friendships

The chief thought that runs through all the sayings is to practice self-control, and no man ever displayed that more difficult of virtues to such a degree as George Washington. (Lodge, Henry C.—George Washington (American Statesman), Vol. I, p. 51.)

Solitude, indeed, is the last quality that an intelligent student of his career would ascribe to him. Dignified and reserved he was, undoubtedly; and as this manner was natural to him, he won more true friends by using it than if he had disguised himself in a forced familiarity and worn his heart upon his sleeve. But from first to last he was a man who did his work in the bonds of companionship, who trusted his comrades in the great enterprise even though they were not his intimates, and who neither sought nor occupied a lonely eminence of unshared glory. (Van Dyke, Henry—The Americanism of Washington, pp. 4-5.)

The DAIRY

MUCH DEPENDS ON CARE OF SEPARATOR

Writer's Advice It Will Be Well to Follow.

One of the chief causes for variations in the per cent of butterfat lies in the operation and care of the cream separator, says the Dakota Farmer. The belief that the percentage of butterfat varies with the feeding of the cow is not correct, for none of the experiment stations have ever found a method of feeding that would maintain the milk flow and at the same time increase the percentage of fat over a long period of time.

Some of the things to watch carefully are:

1. Position of the cream or skim-milk screw. Any change in this screw will affect the cream test.
2. Speed of the separator. Richness of the cream increases with the speed. A speed indicator is recommended for the hand-operated separator.
3. Temperature of the milk. The cooler the milk the richer the cream. Milk should be separated as soon as possible after milking.
4. Richness of the milk. Rich milk means rich cream and should be taken into consideration with the change of season.
5. Rate of milk inflow. Keep the separator supply tank valve open to full capacity. Smaller inflow means richer cream and less waste.
6. Vibration of the separator. Vibration decreases the richness of the cream.
7. Dirty separator bowl. Slime in the separator bowl reduces its diameter, and at the same time the centrifugal force exerted upon the milk, causing thinner cream.

Roughage Important in Dairy Cattle Feeding

Many of the abnormal conditions experienced in dairy cattle feeding when in the past have been attributed to other causes have probably been due to lack of proper quality in the roughage.

If corn fodder rather than corn silage must be a part of the dairy feed supply for this winter, start now to put it in such shape that it can be kept clean, bright, and of the best possible quality. Attention given now to safeguarding palatability and quality in corn fodder will pay big returns later in the winter.

Fodder should be shredded if possible. Shredding or chopping may not increase the digestibility of fodder but does make it possible to store such feeds in much smaller space and under shelter where its quality can be safeguarded.

Corn fodder should not be used as the sole source of roughage. It is better to feed it only once a day, preferably the last thing at night, feeding liberally so that dairy cows are not forced to pick it over too closely. To force cows to feed over corn fodder too closely is poor economy. Forcing cows to eat weathered, moldy, frozen, or snow-dried fodder from the field or stock is the worst of folly.—Successful Farming.

Proving Good Bull
The exchange plan followed by the Franklin County Co-Operative Bull association made it possible to keep alive until his daughters were proved the Holstein bull, Segle Gollish, one of two sires recently added to the long list of proven ones in Idaho. Five of his daughters averaged 13,015 pounds of milk and 472 pounds of fat in a year, an increase of 29 per cent in milk and 85 per cent in fat over their five dams.

Five daughters of another Holstein bull, King Ormay Colantha De Kol 8th, averaged 10 per cent more milk and 18 per cent more fat than their dams, but this one was dead before being proved. He was owned by Brown Brothers of Ovid.—Idaho Farmer.

Dairy Hints
Forty per cent of the counties in the United States are now free from tuberculosis. . . .

Newly freshened cows should not be fed heavily at first. A warm bran mash is very beneficial immediately after freshening. Ground oats, bran, and oil meal can be fed later.

The Holstein-Friesian World gives Idaho credit for having nine herds of Holstein cows, containing a total of 172 head, that are doing herd testing. Only five states have more herds on test and only 10 have more cattle on test.

If the farmer is to be prosperous he must keep the soil prosperous. Nature is one banker that will not grant an overdraft. . . .

A colony of bees in Butler county, Pennsylvania, recently made an unusual record by producing 18 pounds of honey in one day.

North Dakota has reduced the percentage of bovine tuberculosis infected herds to a very low degree and is expected to qualify for complete accreditation within a year.

TAKING "TIME OUT" FOR MENTAL REST

Idleness May Constitute a Virtue at Times.

Many people are afraid of introspection. To the average American up-and-comer, meditation and idleness are sins of the first water. To be active, continually and unceasingly active, is to prove one's worth to the world. And yet, without discrediting activity, it can easily be proven that most great men and most men of unusual accomplishment are at times as physically idle as any statue in a public park. They take time out to think, to meditate and to let their minds wander.

Gandhi, the man who probably is wielding the greatest influence upon the earth today, sets aside one day a week in which he keeps silent while he listens to others, or to his own inner voice; while he meditates and ponders and lets the accumulated problems of the last seven days sink deeply into his brain. The story is told of a young executive who so irritated his subordinates by sitting and looking out of the window day in day out that they complained to the president of the company. The president heard them out and then said: "The young man of whom you complain once thought up an idea which has earned for this company more than $1,000,000, and he did it while looking out of the window." A similar tale concerns a rising young Broadway producer. He never is in his office, but spends most of his time sitting in an easy chair at home. Once or twice a year he develops an idea which, when put into action, brings him and the people associated with him thousands of dollars.

It is not the purpose here to encourage idleness. We merely seek to emphasize the value of thought and of frequent periods of mental, rather than physical, activity. They are good for the soul and good for the brain. Sunday is the day when most people can best take advantage of the opportunity to live quietly, to rest and gather strength for the work of the coming week, to think on what has happened and what has been accomplished and upon what is to be done. Aside from its religious significance, Sunday is valuable to human beings. It represents the closest approach that many of them have to a day of silence.—Ohio State Journal.

Swedes Enjoy Long Life

A Swedish record for longevity seems to be held by the inhabitants of the little parish of Kisa, in central Sweden. The latest figures showed that out of a population of 4,000, 102 persons were over eighty, and of these, ten were over ninety. Some years ago Kisa had Sweden's oldest inhabitant, the farmer Sven Eriksson, who died at one hundred and five and a half years.

"Lucile is the Happiest Girl"

So many mothers nowadays talk about giving their children fruit juices, as if this were a new discovery. As a matter of fact, for over fifty years, mothers have been accomplishing results far surpassing anything you can secure from home prepared fruit juices, by using pure, wholesome California Fig Syrup, which is prepared under the most exacting laboratory supervision from ripe California Figs, richest of all fruits in laxative and nourishing properties.

It's marvelous to see how bilious, weak, feverish, sorrow, constipated, under-nourished children respond to its gentle influence; how their breath clears up, color flames in their cheeks, and they become sturdy, playful, energetic again. A Western mother, Mrs. H. J. Stoll, Valley P. O., Nebraska, says: "My little daughter, Roma Lucile, was constipated from babyhood. I became worried about her and decided to give her some California Fig Syrup. It stopped her constipation quick; and the way it improved her color and made her pick up made me realize how run-down she had been. She is so sturdy and well now, and always in such good humor that neighbors say she's the happiest girl in the West."

Like all good things, California Fig Syrup is limited, but you can always get the genuine by looking for the name "California" on the carton.

Useful Hobby
"Say, dad," cried the boy home from college. "I took up horseback riding, too."
"Fine," replied the father. "Now you can get a job as mounted policeman if you don't like the office."

What Started It All!
Wife—See my new shoes, dear? How do you like them?
Hubby—They're immense!

It never kills a law to execute it.

Get this Beautiful VANITY CASE
Handsome case, containing mirror, powder and puff. Priced only 10 cents and a little of your time. How to get it? (1) Clip out this advertisement. (2) Write name and complete address of nearest of children or young adults who have Club Feet, flat feet, hammer toes, or any other foot ailment. (3) Send all with 10c in stamps. All five conditions must be complied with to get the vanity case. Offer closes Apr. 30, 1913. McLaughlin Orthopedic Sockmakers 915 Ashurst Ave., St. Louis, Mo.

Save your strength—and get a whiter wash, too!

Save your strength—and get a whiter wash, too!
"No wonder you're always tired! The hard work you do on Mondays is enough to wear you out for the rest of the week. And it's all so unnecessary! You can get whiter, brighter clothes just by soaking them in Rinsol suds."

No more washboards
Millions of women have said goodbye to washboards. Rinsol saves scrubbing—saves the clothes. It gets clothes so white, even boiling isn't needed.

Cup for cup, Rinsol gives twice as much suds as lightweight, puffed-up soaps. Creamy, lasting suds. Safe for finest linens—washable colored things, too.

The makers of 40 famous washers recommend Rinsol. It's wonderful for dishwashing, too. Get the BIG package today.

Millions use RINSOL in tub, washer and dishpan

Transparent Man
Doctor—You had better be X-rayed.
Patient—There is no need for that, doctor. Get my wife—she is able to see right through me.

Need A Tonic And Blood Maker?

Elgin, Ill.—"Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery did wonders for me. I think it is the best tonic and blood medicine anyone can take," said Mrs. Harry Glaze of 213 Kimball St. "I was in a general run-down state of health, lacked blood, became very weak, pale and thin, and when I started taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery I began to gain strength, the color came back to my cheeks, I took on weight and felt as well physically as one could wish." Druggists sell.

Quick Growth
A little girl who had been left to watch the soup was presently heard to sing out:
"Oh, mother, come quick, the soup is getting bigger than the pot!"

SORE THROAT
FIVE minutes after you rub on Musterole your throat should begin to feel less sore! Continue the treatment once every hour for five hours and you'll be astonished at the relief.

This famous blend of oil of mustard, camphor, menthol and other ingredients brings relief naturally. Musterole acts because it is a "counter-irritant"—not just a salve—it penetrates and stimulates blood circulation and helps to draw out infection and pain. Used by millions for 20 years. Recommended by doctors and nurses.

To Mothers—Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

MUSTEROLE

THE STORY

Hiram Butterworth, miser, decides to leave his fortune to Elmer Clarke, a poor young nephew. He tells Absalom McPeake, his lawyer, of a deal forty years ago in which he swindled a man out of $40,000, and arranges for payment with interest. Butterworth dies suddenly. Nellie Cathcart, Elmer's sweetheart, tells him his inheritance is more than a million. "Colorado Charley" and his partner, Mac, decide to pluck Elmer. Unknown to Elmer, Nellie is heiress of the man Butterworth swindled and she figures there is about $1,000,000 coming to her. Elmer becomes a candidate for school trustee. Posing as a newspaper reporter under the name of Doris Gatewood, Colorado Charley's confederate calls on Elmer. Nellie recognizes in her the adventuress type. She sees Elmer is being "played" and takes steps to frustrate the plot.

CHAPTER X

Arrived at Doris' home, Elmer soberly announced his intention of departing for Pilearitos next day, but promised to look in again on his way north and say goodbye. The result was that when he did "look in" he found Doris alone. She was curled up on a divan, sobbing audibly, when Elmer walked up on the porch of the bungalow, glanced in through the screen door and saw her.

With the license of an old friend he entered unannounced, sat down beside her, and tenderly inquired what the matter might be.

"Oh, Elmer darling, I can't bear it—I can't—I can't!" the girl sobbed. "I'll be so lonely!"

She seized his hand, covered her tear-stained face with it—and kissed it very humbly and benignantly. An instant later she was in Elmer's arms and he was kissing her tears away and murmuring words of endearment. Presently her soft cheek was against his and she was, according to her own statement, the happiest girl in the world!

Many a man has been captured less adroitly but nevertheless as securely. Elmer had three hundred miles of motoring before him that day, so he did not linger long over his leave-taking—just long enough to swear undying love and promise fervently to write the light of his life daily until they should meet again—soon!

As a curious commentary on the unfaithfulness of man and the general inconsistency of the creature, it is worthy of remark that thirty miles up the road Elmer Clarke quivered, sighed dimly and murmured very distinctly: "Oh, Lord, what an ass I am! What a jam I'm in! What am I going to do?"

About the same time Doris, perched on Colorado Charley's thin knees, was telling him the inside story of her conquest.

Colorado Charley stroked her fair cheek. "You're papa's little sweetheart," he declared happily. "We're almost broke, Mac. When you've had half a dozen letters from him, he should be touched for a thousand."

Elmer Clarke suffered every foot of the journey back to Pilearitos. Not that he reproached himself with having made a mistake; but he faced an unpleasant issue and there was no possible chance of avoiding it if he purposed living with himself the remainder of his life. Rather than face Nellie and tell her that the love he had formerly vowed to her had all been a mistake, he would cheerfully have submitted to the bastinado.

Nevertheless it had to be done, even though his sense of chivalry and decency revolted at the prospect. He took Nellie out to Joe Angelotti's road house for dinner and tried desperately to be his old cheerful self. However, no man has ever succeeded in deceiving a highly intelligent woman who loves him, and from the moment she had got into the car Nellie was aware that whatever it was that troubled him he was not going to keep it to himself forever. All he required was a decent opportunity to discharge his cargo of grief, so on the way home Nellie decided to be kind to him.

"Elmer," she said suddenly, "you're unhappy. Am I the cause of your unhappiness?"

He nodded, afraid to trust himself to speak.

"Well, we're not engaged, Elmer, so speak freely. Is there another girl?"

"Unhappily there is, Nellie."

"Unhappily for whom?"

"For both of us," he finally ground out.

"Speak for yourself, Elmer," she countered. "Are you very unhappy about it?"

"Quite."

"Why?"

"You ought to know," he complained.

"I am not a mind reader, Elmer. That's why I ask questions. Now that you have decided on a new sweetheart, are you dissatisfied with your selection?"

"No-o!" He was ready to weep.

"It—lacerates me, Nellie, but I—I had to tell you. A fellow's got to come clean with a girl like you—no use to play a double game. I—I've made a mistake. Took you out to-night to tell you—thanks for helping me with the dirty job."

"Please do not mention it, Elmer dear. It's my fault entirely. Nobody knew better than I the risks I was taking—and I'm much too wise to think a mere man can be a paragon. You were quite within your rights in following the dictates of your wandering fancy. I thought you might want to some time, so I decided to give you a free hand and let it happen now. I entertain no resentment, Elmer, and there isn't the slightest necessity for you and me discontinuing our lovely friendship. I am of the opinion that you do not know any more about women than a popper does about astronomy and I am perfectly willing that you should have a wide experience before I take on the job of educating you. To date you're the finest man I have ever met and I'm not going to ruin my happiness by letting you escape. I'll set you yet, Elmer. Meanwhile, enjoy yourself!"

"And you're not angry with me, Nellie?"

"Not the least little bit."

"You're positively wonderful!"

"You're positively childish. But then most men are—where women are concerned. Don't you see, Elmer?"

"I understand you so well that I can read your mind."

"I know it," Elmer soliloquized. "I smiled that touch coming, only I thought it would come from Harvey. Well, one thing is certain—they need that thousand dollars badly, or Doris would never have asked me for it."

Still wrapped in the fogs of misunderstanding and still in incomplete possession of his senses, Elmer sent her a check on the Pilearitos Commercial Trust & Savings bank for the sum in question. Two days later the check was returned through a Los Angeles bank for payment.

Now, it so happened that Alice Goodfellow had had an attack of the migraines that day and the consequence Nellie Cathcart had to take over Miss Goodfellow's task of posting the customer's ledger. Naturally, as she sorted the checks at the close of the day's business preparatory to charging them up, she came across Elmer B. Clarke's check for the sum of one thousand dollars, in favor of Doris Gatewood. It had been indorsed by Doris Gatewood and bore, in addition, the indorsement of Harvey Gatewood and the Los Angeles bank. Pasted to the check was a small red label bearing the words "Please wire if uncollectable." Evidently the Los Angeles bank had taken the check for collection.

"That work, Doris darling," Nellie murmured. "From a stack of printed tags she selected one and checked off in red ink from a long list of standard excuses for failure to honor a check the excuse which she knew would start a riot between Elmer and the payee without involving her in it. "Signature of indorser irregular." And that was absolutely true, since Nellie knew the names in both cases were fictitious. With a little smile of malice she inclosed the rejected check in an envelope and shot it back to the Los Angeles bank.

"And now," she murmured to the adding machine, "we shall see the which we shall see. This new love of Elmer's will wire him for an explanation and he will come over to the bank with blood in his lovelorn eyes and demand an explanation of Anse Moody. Old Anse will call me in and scold me for being stupid and I'll have to hand Elmer the lot number one. After that Elmer will follow in my rapid succession. Alas, poor Elmer!"

Events fell out even as Nellie had foretold. A devil with a whip of fire drove Elmer Clarke to the bank early the next afternoon. His check had been questioned, the love of his life had called him hysterically on the telephone and he had to do or die. Only, as he was figuratively dying, he belied his trembling soul by stalling into old Anse Moody's lair and in a thundering voice demanded of that astounded individual what the devil he meant by refusing payment on one of his checks.

Well, there was nothing to do now save go through with the awful operation, so with a flashing eye that belied his trembling soul he stalked into old Anse Moody's lair and in a thundering voice demanded of that astounded individual what the devil he meant by refusing payment on one of his checks.

News Events of Interest to the Public
In General

Chapel Service

The Chapel Service Tuesday morning was conducted by Rev. Coburn. His subject was the division of the New Testament.

The New Testament is divided into five parts. The first four books are the gospels; the next book is history; the next fourteen books are special letters; the next seven are general letters and the last book is prophecy.

The gospels get us acquainted with Christ and the book of history tells us of the many beginnings of His Church. The special and general letters tell us how His work progressed and also the instructions that were given to the different churches. Then the last book tells of the many things to come. Many of the prophecies have been fulfilled and it is not to be doubted that many more will be fulfilled when God wills it.

The Juniors did not sell pop corn last week. They plan to let everybody get good and hungry for pop corn and then maybe they can sell more. Well we hope they made good profits Tuesday.

The students in English Three and Four are struggling along over Riddons High School Grammar. There's at least one teacher that sympathizes with us. Mr. Appleman wishes us success.

Frederick Laub won the oratorical contest held in the school last week. The participants were members of the Sociology class.

The Home Economics Department wanted the large mirror in their room so they took soup money and purchased a small mirror for the cloak room and took the large mirror from the cloak room. The girls want the Manual Training boys to make a stand for the new mirror.

The absentees during the past week have been many.

Robert Hart of Grade Eight is quite seriously ill with Bright's disease. The class sent flowers to him.

Irene Williams of Grade Seven is moving to Auburn.

The children in the various rooms enjoyed Valentine exchanges and Lincoln's birthday remembrances on Friday.

Little Frances Russell is much improved at this writing.

The teachers did attend institute at Auburn on Saturday last.

Sorry that English is such a bore. Perhaps there's a reason, since there are two sides to everything.

AVIAN TUBERCULOSIS FOUND IN LOCAL HOGS

That Avian Tuberculosis exists in at least sixteen per cent of swine raised locally has been proved by marking a large shipment of hogs from Waterloo on January 30th. A tattoo was used at the local stock yards to identify each lot when slaughtered under Government inspection at the Packing House.

A report has been received from the Inspector in charge of meat inspection at Buffalo on nine of the fourteen lots shipped five of the nine lots revealed the disease as did sixteen per cent of the total number of the hogs.

Each affected hog averaged 80 cent loss to the packer which is eventually borne by the farmer when the market price is determined. Owners of healthy hogs suffer loss along with the owner of diseased stock.

The disease is spread to hogs from aged tubercular chickens. For this reason the Bureau of Animal Industry has taken steps to inform the farmers the danger of keeping the aged hen in the production of eggs. Recently a test was made of a dozen or two aged hens from several flocks of chickens in the vicinity of Topeka in which the disease was not known to exist. The result of this test was that 60 per cent of these flocks were affected with Tuberculosis.

In the near future similar work will be started near Auburn and Waterloo by a Federal Veterinarian who will visit poultrymen and farmers and demonstrate methods used by Bureau of Animal Industry controlling Avian Tuberculosis in poultry and swine.

Washington - - - -

Inadequate supplies, poorly trained and badly equipped troops won a seven year's war! One man, George Washington, did it. A sense of timeliness and the Napoleonic theory that the best defense is attack, won through a difficult situation.

Now, during the two hundredth anniversary of the birth of Washington a similar situation demands equivalent strategy. The best defense is not hoarding money—the best defense is an attack on the root of the evil—inadequate buying.

A BIRD'S-EYE VIEW OF SCOUTING

The Scout Oath and Law reveal the spirit of Scouting. The Scout is expected and trained to "Be Prepared" and daily to do "Good Turns."

Scouting is a Companionship—a way of living. It values deeds above words. It builds character through habit and citizenship through service. It develops co-operation through co-operating. It learns through doing. Its outdoor craft enhealthens, deepens, and enriches boy life. "Scouting is a process of making real men out of boys, by a real program"—an interest-gripping, growth-producing, character-building program of activities. Scouting activities are of great worth in themselves as well as in their by-products of habits and attitudes.

"Scouting is non-sectarian, though its ideals are in accord of those of the modern church and it is based upon a pledged allegiance to the service of God, and the brotherhood of man."

It builds better boys through influences and ideals which operate within the "gang." The pressure from within the troop tends to keep the Scout "physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight."

Dean James E. Russell, of Teachers College, Columbia University, says of Scouting: "The naturalist may praise it for success in putting the boy close to nature's heart; the moralist, for its splendid code of ethics; the hygienist, for its methods of physical training; the parent, for its ability to keep the boy out of mischief; but from the standpoint of the educator, it has marvelous potency for converting the restless, irresponsible, self-centered boy into the straightforward, dependable, helpful young citizen. To the boy who will give himself to it, there is plenty of work that looks like play, standards of excellence which he can appreciate, rules of conduct which he must obey, positions of responsibility which he may occupy as soon as he qualifies himself in a word, a program that appeals to a boy's instincts, and a method adapted to a boy's nature."

Scouting is no new institution entering a community. It is a method, a proved way offered to organizations already existing in the community.

Its Scoutmasters primarily are to help organize and give sympathetic direction to boy activities and interests.

Scouting is voluntary, yet purposeful activity on the part of the boys. The Scoutmaster is their friend, advisor, helper, companion, and director.

—From the Handbook for Scoutmasters.

LOUCKS AND HART GIVEN SUSPENDED SENTENCE

Judge Endicott Thursday morning showed mercy for the wife and three young children of Harry Loucks of St. Joe, by suspending his sentence for stealing.

Loucks' partner, Donald Hart, benefited by the court's action, as it was deemed best to treat both defendants alike. The term was eleven months at the state farm. However, each one had to arrange to pay a fine of $1 and costs, totalling $15.85, before they were released.

Loucks at 22 has a wife and three children. He told the court he was married when he was only 17, getting a marriage license at Coldwater, Mich. Hart is 21 and single. Last summer one night they stole two kits of wrenches belonging to the Tri-Lakes Construction Co. of Columbia City, from a shed along the St. Joe-Spencerville road, which was being paved. They were caught only a few days ago.

The youths told the court they intended to sell the tools. They were never in trouble before, but the court warned them to behave themselves in the future or be required to serve their sentence. They will be required to make frequent reports to Sheriff John P. Hoff.

Russell R. Ridenour appeared as counsel for the defendants, while Richard W. Sharpless, prosecuting attorney, represented the state.

OBITUARY

Frances Matilda Koch, daughter of Solomon and Esther Shilling, was born near Spencerville in DeKalb County, September 13, 1854. She departed this life on February 19, 1932 at the age of 78 years, 8 months and 6 days. At the age of 12 she entered upon a faithful Christian life. She joined the Concord Methodist Protestant Church at this time. Later her membership was transferred to the Fairview Methodist Protestant Church and then to the St. Joe Methodist Protestant Church. On February 17, 1880 she married John U. Koch of St. Joe. This union was one of fifty-two years.

TOWNSHIP ASSESSORS WILL MEET FRIDAY

A meeting of the township assessors of DeKalb county is to be held at the court house Friday for the purpose of considering the appraisements of real estate and personal property to be made this year.

County Assessor Charles Miser announced Tuesday that James Showalter, chairman of the state board of tax commissioners, may be present. The session will start at 10:00 A. M. and will continue most of the day.

The valuation to be fixed on all kinds of property will be discussed. The session is of paramount interest at this time because of the reduced market values of property as compared with 1929, when the last reappraisal of real estate for taxation was made. The assessors and their deputies will begin their annual canvass of property owners next Tuesday, March 1.

HOW TO KEEP LARD

Lard that is carefully rendered from leaf fat, fat back strips and trimmings from the sides, hams and shoulders can be kept fresh and sweet for a long time if it is placed in sterilized, air-tight containers and stored in a dry, well ventilated, dark place.

If lard is stored in crocks or jars, they should be sealed with paraffin after the lard is cooled. Intestinal fat should not be used with other fats in making lard because it often makes an inferior grade and may have an offensive odor.

LYMAN LOCKWOOD FOUND DEAD IN WOODS

Taps were sounded Thursday afternoon for Lyman Lockwood, a veteran of the Civil War, living in Jackson township on State Road No. 1, four and one-half miles south of Auburn. Mr. Lockwood died suddenly of a heart attack in the woods on his farm sometime before 5 o'clock.

The aged man, as was his custom each day, left the house about 3 o'clock to walk through the woods. He had a path which he followed on his daily excursions and Thursday started to walk to where his sons, Ora and Bert Lockwood, were cutting timber.

The sons were not aware that their father was nearby and after finishing their work they left the woods for supper. Walter Williams, who was also in the woods, went to the house and discovering Mr. Lockwood's absence he searched the house and then went to the woods where he found the body.

Mr. Lockwood was one of eight children of Alonzo and Rosamond Lockwood, pioneers who came to DeKalb county in an early day in a covered wagon and entered land. The elder Lockwood became one of the largest landowners in DeKalb county, owning at one time 3,600 acres.

It was on the farm where his parents first settled that the deceased was born 85 years ago on May 22nd. At the age of 16 Mr. Lockwood shouldered a rifle and went to Fort Wayne where he enlisted in 1862 in Co. K, 44th Indiana Volunteer Infantry. He served until the end of the war.

On his return Mr. Lockwood was united in marriage with Mary Whetsel of Jackson township sixty years ago. She survives.

To Mr. and Mrs. Lockwood were born five children, all of whom survive. They are Mrs. Frank Avery of Auburn, Ora and Bert Lockwood, and Mrs. Nellie Doach and Mrs. Nellie Griffin, residing near the parental home in Jackson township. Also living are nine grandchildren and one sister, Mrs. Cornelia Caruth of Auburn.

Mr. Lockwood a number of years ago made preparation for his death. From cypress grown on his land he made a casket and of nine years it was kept in Mr. Lockwood's crypt in the mausoleum at Woodlawn cemetery.

Deputy Coroner Howard Clark held an inquest and determined that death resulted from coronary thrombosis or a blood clot in the heart.

The funeral services were held from the Clark funeral home at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon, Rev. H. F. Craven, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church officiating. Interment was made in the mausoleum at Woodlawn cemetery.

WATERLOO CONVENTION ELECTS OFFICERS

Twenty-five registered delegates were reported at the close of the sixty-sixth annual county convention held at Waterloo, last Thursday and Friday. The convention elected the following officers to serve for the next year: For president, Ward Jackman, of Auburn; first vice president, Stanley Means of St. Joe; second vice president, Fred B. Leighty of St. Joe; third vice president, W. C. McBride of Auburn, and secretary-treasurer, Miss Sadie Coy of Auburn. Miss Coy will serve for the eleventh year as secretary-treasurer.

Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick of St. Joe, was named superintendent of the children's division; Miss Rose Smith of Corunna, young people's division; Clyde Hart of Spencerville, adult division; Miss Helen Manrow of Corunna, educational division, and Harry Hursh, St. Joe, administrative division.

WITH OUR CLUB LADIES

L. L. C.

An evening with George Washington in the Colonial past gave inspiration to a delightful party given last Wednesday evening at the home of Mrs. Willis Cox, when a committee representing the active members of the Ladies Literary Club entertained as their honored guests of the evening, the honorary members.

At 6:30 the dinner signal was given and the guests were seated at tables bearing the color scheme of red, white and blue. The patriotic colored mail-boxes bearing the names of the guests sufficed as name cards, while tiny chocolate hatchets, chopped into broken stumps of chocolate reams, used for favors, did not fail to remind us that almost 200 years ago George Washington was said to have chopped down a cherry tree and didn't tell a lie about it. A delicious two course dinner was then served. Between courses Mrs. Willis Cox and Miss Helen Dittmars sang two patriotic songs, "How Betsy Made the Flag," and "America For Me."

After the dinner hour the rooms were cleared of all debris and Mrs. Willis Cox told a delightfully interesting story of America's greatest hero. Promptly, at the end of the story Martha and George Washington stepped from an aged photograph and returned to our modern world for a short period through the medium of the playlet "George and Martha Returned." Martha Miser was Martha herself, Helen Dittmars feigned the part of George Washington. Mrs. Parlia Hull was George, the descendant and Lucile Curie played the part of the modern Martha, a descendant also of the Washingtons.

The remainder of the evening was spent in renewing acquaintances. Mrs. Addie Patterson of Fort Wayne and Mrs. DeLora Curie were the only charter members present. Those present from out of town were Mrs. Belle Barney, Hicksville, Ohio; Mrs. Mary Bartlett, Mrs. Marguerite Hercules, Mrs. Jessie Rice and Mrs. Addie Patterson of Fort Wayne; Mrs. Minnie Bayman of New Haven; Mrs. Pauline Baumgartner, Mrs. Golden High, and Mrs. Winifred Shook of Spencerville; Mrs. Nina Kees of Butler; Mrs. Mae Miser of Garrett and Mrs. Zola Stomms and Miss Reba Woods of Ashley. Honorary members from St. Joe who were present were Mrs. Thelma Baker and Mrs. Edna Perkins.

HOME BUREAU

The February meeting of the Home Bureau was held at the Gym, Mrs. Clara Foltz as hostess. Thirty members responded to roll call with a valentine verse. Minutes of last meeting were read and accepted. Under business a committee of four ladies was appointed to work with the finance committee. Two project leaders were chosen, Mrs. Grace Sheffer with Mrs. Hazel Nichols as assistant. Mrs. Pluma Hamilton gave a very interesting report on the Purdue Conference.

At this time the meeting was turned over to the ladies of the country with Mrs. Bird Nichols as chairman, who proved to be very clever. A playlet entitled, "Garden Seeds" was very amusing and well given by Mrs. Hazel Nichols and Mrs. Bird Nichols. The hog calling contest by the country ladies was greatly enjoyed by all. Mrs. Mabel Baker winning the laurels. The ladies of the country treated all to apples and home made candy. The meeting adjourned to meet March 18th at the gym.

A large crowd attended the supper at the Concord Church Monday evening.

Mrs. Robert Stingle and Mrs. Newman Urban, of Ashley, visited Mrs. Willis Cox Monday.

SECOND WIFE GIVES UP EXPLORER LIFE

Hubbard's Bride Succumbs to Jungle Terrors.

Boston.—The spell of "Darkest Africa," which wrecked the first marital venture of Wynant D. Hubbard, former Harvard star football player, has cast its gloom over his second attempt. It was learned here when it was announced Hubbard and his pretty bride of a year have started for home from their honeymoon nest in Rhodesia.

Just last summer Hubbard and his chorus girl bride announced to the world that they were setting forth on a ten-year honeymoon, which would be spent in the jungles and on the veldt. Now comes the news that the couple have abandoned all hopes of marital bliss and contentment and are trekking to the African coast, Boston-bound.

The former Mrs. Hubbard, with her two children, one of whom was born in the African bush, may well have smiled when Isabel Menzies, late of a musical comedy, informed interviewers last summer that she and "Wyn" planned to build their love cottage among the fronds and creepers of southern Rhodesia, there to dwell for ten long years.

She, too, had sampled Africa with "Wyn," and nine years of the combination led to the divorce court. She and her children have since been making their home with her mother, Mrs. Frank M. Carson, at Greenwich, Conn. Hubbard's colorful career as football player and African explorer had occupied front pages and magazines during the past ten years. Only the fact of his divorce and early marriage to the dancer, Isabel Menzies, escaped the eyes of Hubbard fans, who followed his moves from the time he was the storm center of the Harvard-Princeton athletic dispute.

He was married to Margaret Carson in 1921, while he was a Junior at Harvard. They had met in Labrador where they were working with the Grenfell mission. After his graduation from Harvard, they set out for Africa, carrying along Wynant, Jr., who had been born to them in the sub-zero climes, where Doctor Grenfell and his volunteers carry on their work. They established themselves in southern Rhodesia, and there another baby was born to the former Vassar graduate as the thermometer registered 114 degrees in the shade. They returned to the United States after three years in the bush, then tragedy struck. Little Wynant, Jr., fell off a dock and was drowned at the couple's summer home in Provincetown.

The African idyll and the couple's return to this country led to a series of magazine articles and stories by both Mr. and Mrs. Hubbard. Wynant continued his writings, climaxing his

Nation's Wealth for 1930, 329 Billion

New York.—America's national wealth for 1930 was revealed by the National Industrial Conference board as $329,700,000,000. The total national income was $71,000,000,000.

This means for each family a capital of $10,961 and a family income of $2,300—if equally divided.

The capital dropped 8.9 per cent from 1929 and income decreased 16.4.

The per capita wealth for Illinois in 1930 was $2,938.

Sweden Plans Aid for Its Inventors

Stockholm.—The Swedish invention corporation, formed here for testing and marketing new Swedish inventions, has now announced its working program, which offers several points of interest.

Inventions submitted to the company will first be thoroughly tested by a staff of experts among whom are no less than four Nobel prize winners. If the experts desire an invention worth supporting the company will help the inventor to get it practically exploited, financed and launched on the world market.

The directors of the company have undertaken to create a fund for the support of poor Swedish inventors by allocating a certain part of the company's profits for that purpose.

At a conference just held by the company with its staff of experts Thor Thorenblad, the managing director of the concern, announced that already hundreds of new inventions have been submitted to the firm, several of which are of great value.

Former Teacher Returns to Farm in Gold Search

Madison, Neb.—A 32-year search for gold has been revived here by Dr. T. A. Leach of Hutchinson, Kan.

About thirty-two years ago, it was claimed, a vein of gold and silver of considerable size was discovered on the J. F. Mauser farm. Leach was a country school teacher then. He resolved to return some day and prospect in earnest, to see if the deposit was real and if ore was present in sufficient quantities for mining.

Well drillers are sinking a hole on the Mauser farm now. The shaft is down 540 feet, but no gold-bearing ore has been brought up.

Scientist Says Texas Once Was Slimy Marsh

Austin, Texas.—The vast caprock of Texas, 1,000 feet above the surrounding western plains, was a slimy marsh in the Triassic age, believes Prof. E. C. Case, director of the Museum of Paleontology of the University of Michigan.

Specimens of prehistoric monsters unearthed near Clewiston, Texas, support his theory. Doctor Case and a party of scientists recently removed to Michigan fossils of great historic value.

The fossil of a mastodon, companion to the primitive tiger, horse, camel and rhinoceros, was unearthed in a gravel pit near Amarillo. The skull was five feet wide, indicating the monster stood over 15 feet high. Doctor Case found the dorsal armor of a giant phytosaur of the Triassic age a few weeks ago. Phytosaurs were large carnivorous reptiles, six to ten feet long.

Doctor Case believes the Texas Panhandle to be the richest field in the world for a study of the Triassic age.

Goes to Sunday School 49 Years Without Break

Miamisburg, Ohio.—An American record for continuous Sunday school attendance was believed established here when Amos Gebhart, sixty-three years old, completed 49 years of perfect attendance at the First Lutheran church.

Amos, who was only away from this city once in his life, when he made a visit to his brother, C. C. Gebhart, 7030 St. Lawrence avenue, Chicago, has attended Sunday school 2,549 consecutive times, every Sunday since he was fourteen years old. The week Amos visited in Chicago he got credit for attending Sunday school there.

Amos was born in the city of 5,000 and is known to every one as the champion churchgoer.

Sheer Wool Frock Midseason Choice

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

IT'S TIME for a new frock, one which seems to say a not too sudden good-bye to winter, yet in its happy bright coloring and lightness carries a hint of approaching spring. Rather a paradoxical call of the mode we'll agree, but one which finds a timely and logical answer in the fascinating new sheer woollens which are so pleasing to the eye and so comfortable to wear. The tomato-red, rose-pink, and dune blue, colorings and their novel weaves throughout advance fabric displays.

The sheerness of the new woollens is perfectly amazing. They take one by surprise for often they have a sturdy look, while in reality they are as airy-fairy as the most fanatical may desire. The tomato-red, rose-pink, and dune blue, colorings and their novel weaves throughout advance fabric displays.

Added to the beauty of the fabric of which this dress is made are two interesting style features which are especially noteworthy. One is the capulet sleeve, which is so often mentioned this season. In this instance the capulet effect is achieved via tiny caplets of self-material. The other important message of the mode is the skirt of many gorges which is manipulated so as to give a snug hipline with a gentle flare at the hem.

The dress to the left is made of a very charming novelty wool which is flecked and invisibly striped with artificial silk. This material presents innumerable smart possibilities for town and campus wear, for it is sheer, soft and supple, and tailors exceptionally well. Notice the embroidered lining.

WITH PRINT BLOUSE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

The monotone suit with the printed blouse is a favorite theme on the mid-season and spring program. The smart jacket suit pictured is in natural shantung with blouse of perian print.

Belge for Spring

Champagne beige is already forecast as one of the smartest colors for spring wear. Some of the newest blouses and frocks now being shown in fashion houses are of a soft creamy beige.

NEWEST ENSEMBLE HAS SUBTLE CHARM

A subtle relationship marks the frock and coat of the newest ensemble. Nothing so banal any more as both garments in the same fabric and massed by the same trimming and treatment. No, the new ensemble owes its charm to far more interesting accents than those.

Usually the coat and frock are of two different materials, of the same coloring, of course. Very often the color of the fur on the coat is repeated in different trimming on the frock. And even if the coat and frock do not subscribe absolutely to the same treatment and detail, some note such as tucking or emplacements announces to the world that the coat and frock were just made for one another and for you.

Toenails Make Entry Into Fashion Picture

Paris decrees that, just as lips, cheeks and fingernails must match, so must the toenail polish be included to produce the perfect ensemble.

Katharine McConnon, explaining to Aromatics Magazine the vogue of coloring the toenail, says that the mode originated on the beach, and has now penetrated even to the drawing room. European women, it appears, have gone quite mad over this mode for evening. Fashions in evening sandals follow closely the pattern of beach sandals, either leaving the seductive carmine toenails practically exposed or veiling them ever so slightly with gossamer stockings. Whichever one does, the intent is there, aided and abetted by the shoemaker, to project toenails into the fashion picture.

A Parisian designer has introduced the waistcoat suit with a little fitted jacket with slanting pockets and a belt that stops at the front sides.

CROWN JEWELS OF SPAIN MOSTLY MYTH

Deposed Monarch Had None Worth Mentioning.

Madrid, Spain.—Ex-King Alfonso XIII lost considerable property of value as a result of the confiscation of his goods decreed by the cortes constituents when he was declared an outlaw, but in so far as jewels are concerned he has relatively little to worry about.

The "question of the Spanish crown jewels," or the "mystery of the Spanish crown jewels," bobs up every now and then in the press of Europe and especially in British newspapers, but the whole thing is not as complicated as all of that.

As a matter of fact, for all practical purposes, there are no notable Spanish crown jewels. American tourists, who cross to Europe and gaze in astonishment at British crown jewels in the tower of London, with equal amazement learned upon arriving here in the days of the monarchy that there were no Spanish crown jewels to be seen. They could go to the royal armory and see possibly the greatest collection of medieval armor in the world, and if they were lucky they might manage to see the throne room at the palace, which is as gorgeous as anything of its kind anywhere. But Spain never has had any jewels to show off.

When Don Alfonso left Spain last April 14 he naturally left his crown behind. But that was only a small thing, with a few pearls and diamonds. He was crowned with it in 1902, but never wore it after that, and on formal openings of parliament and such occasions it remained on a cushioning an object of much more value than the crown.

While the Spanish crown and the king had no exceptionally valuable jewelry, the queen personally did own many important jewels of various sorts. Queen Victoria Eugenia was the Princess Victoria Eugenia of Battenberg (Princess Ena), granddaughter of Queen Victoria, and niece of King Edward VII. The deficiency of the Spanish crown jewels was made up for at the time of her marriage to King Alfonso in 1906 by regal presents from King Edward and other relatives and sovereigns.

COMFORT for COLICKY BABIES

... THROUGH CASTORIA'S GENTLE REGULATION

The best way to prevent colic, doctors say, is to avoid gas in stomach and bowels by keeping the entire intestinal tract open, free from waste. But remember this: a tiny baby's tender little organs cannot stand harsh treatment. They must be gently urged. This is just the time Castoria can help most. Castoria, you know, is made specially for babies and children. It is a pure vegetable preparation, perfectly harmless. It contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. For years it has helped mothers through trying times with colicky babies and children suffering with digestive upsets, colds and fever. Keep genuine Castoria on hand, with the name:

CHAPTER X—Continued

"I thought you might be. One can't treat one's fiancée so casually and hope to escape unscathed, Elmer. I'd feel badly at such treatment myself."

"She's hot my fiancée."

"But you told me she was. You flitted me for her. Surely you must have been quite certain of your ground before you disclosed your altered feelings toward me."

"Well, she's no fiancée of mine," he protested doggedly.

"Then, pray, what is she? A friend?"

"Not any more."

"An enemy?"

"Perhaps."

"Elmer, did you promise to lend her the money or give it to her?"

"She asked for a loan."

"For how long. Did she offer any security?"

"No security. It was a Kathleen Mavrouneen loan."

"I don't understand, Elmer."

"It may be for years and it may be forever," he quoted from the Celtic ballad.

"But you agreed to make the loan, didn't you?"

"Certainly. Didn't I send my check?"

"You did. It's too bad you didn't send her the cash—by express. Then your ex-sweetheart wouldn't have learned your silly secret, and you wouldn't now face the necessity for running away because you're afraid to face me again. Elmer darling, I very greatly fear you're just a little bit cowardly."

He was stung to the core of his being. "I'm not a coward," he replied coldly. "I have a Distinguished Service cross to prove that."

"Proof! That's animal courage. I was referring to moral courage."

Elmer saw he was outnumbered and outmaneuvered and if he would escape annihilation, he must withdraw from the fight forthwith. "That sort of talk will never get you anywhere with me," he warned her. "I'm quite capable of attending to my own business."

"You've certainly been mismanaging it lately. Without my volunteered help you would be absorbing a thousand dollar loss right now, and with that little gold digger on your hands you'd be operating in red ink before the first of the year."

"Who told you she was a gold digger?"

"You did."

"I didn't."

"Not in so many words. But you stopped payment on your check, which is an admission that you suspect she is a gold digger."

"Well, that's my business, and I don't see any necessity for arguing the matter with you. It's a closed chapter."

"My word, you're an optimist. What caused you to stop payment of your check?"

"That's some more of my business."

"You're so immersed in your business you haven't had the decency to thank me for saving you a thousand dollars and possible entanglement with an adventuress. Elmer, in addition to being a little bit cowardly I'm afraid you're a little bit unmanly and a little bit ungrateful."

"Nellie," he said huskily, "I'm gutty on all three counts. I'm terribly sorry. Ordinarily I wouldn't—that is, I couldn't—I mean to you—you so fine I—I—Nellie, I'm not very happy and I want to go away and forget it. I'm ashamed to look you in the eye."

"I understand thoroughly, Elmer. Well, you're forgiven everything—all except running away like a tin-canned dog. Really, you act as if you are horribly afraid of something."

"I am, but I can't discuss it over the telephone. Tell you what I'll do, Nellie. I'll delay my departure and you come to dinner with me tonight."

"I'd love to, Elmer, but not tonight. But I can go with you tomorrow night. I'm too busy to see you before then."

Reluctantly Elmer agreed to her counter proposal and Nellie, hugely satisfied with herself, hung up and returned to the bank, where she wrote the following letter to J. Fitzgerald, acting captain of detectives, Los Angeles police department:

"Dear Captain Fitzgerald:

"With reference to the matter we discussed over the long-distance telephone, when I told you that a check in favor of Doris Gatewood had been received at this bank and was being returned with the notation 'Signature of indorser irregular':

"You will be glad to know that my request in conforming to my request and mailing anonymously to Mr. Clarke the police records and rogues' gallery photographs of Colorado Charley has borne rich fruit. Within a few minutes after its receipt Mr. Clarke called at the bank and ordered payment stopped on the check. He was much disturbed. Shortly thereafter he purchased two thousand dollars' worth of travelers' checks here, so I realized he was about to leave the state."

"Immediately I made it my business to call him up and ascertained, without letting him know I was pumping him, that he is frightened and panicky. Evidently he has compromised himself, probably in writing, and now fears reprisals from the outraged and disappointed lady in the shape of a suit for breach of promise. My personal opinion is, however, that now they realize his suspicions are aroused, they will endeavor to extract as large a cash settlement as possible, guaranteeing no publicity in return. Of course we must protect him by catching them in the act of leaving black-mail, and if Mr. Clarke fled the state we couldn't do that, could we? So I have managed to delay his departure forty-eight hours."

"This letter will reach you via the same train that carries Mr. Clarke's rejected check back to the Los Angeles bank. In fact, it will reach you earlier than that, because I am sending it special delivery. Immediately upon receipt of it, please arrange to have the movements of this unsavory couple watched and report to me by telephone."

"Yours truly,

"Nellie Cathcart."

CHAPTER XI

The following afternoon Nellie received a long distance call from Los Angeles. Acting Captain of Detectives J. Fitzgerald was reporting.

"Sent a man out to watch the house as soon as I got your letter," he announced. "The bank must have telephoned them about the check, for at half past ten they called a taxi and went down to the office of a shyder attorney. They were there two hours and then returned to the bungalow. As soon as my man reported they were in conference with that particular lawyer the whole thing was as clear as mud."

"They're going up to Pilarcitos to shake the boy down as sure as death and taxes, so I have started two good men for Pilarcitos in a fast automobile. They will install a dictograph in the young fellow's house and listen in on the unholy proposition. I want you to provide a fast and accurate stenographer to take down every word. Can you do that?"

"I'm the fastest and most accurate stenographer in this county," Nellie replied quickly.

"Good girl! Now, then, I'm going to leave it to you to arrange for a clear field for my men. They've got to be alone in that house for an hour."

"I have already arranged that. I will explain the details to your representative when he calls tomorrow morning."

"Thanks. We'll land 'em out in the tall grass, never fear. I'll phone you if anything new develops."

He did—at eight-thirty a. m. next day, to report that Colorado Charley and his lady friend had purchased tickets from Los Angeles to Pilarcitos and return; that they were due in Pilarcitos at nine-two that night.

At ten o'clock a sleepy-looking man walked into the bank and immediately sought Nellie Cathcart's window, a small gold sign bearing Nellie's name serving as a cue.

"I'm Detective Sergeant Fahy, from Los Angeles," he announced. "The chief sent me an' my partner up with orders to report to you."

"I'm pleased to meet you, Mr. Fahy. Here are your instructions," and she handed him a sealed envelope. "Good morning."

"Just met the smartest Jane in the world," Mr. Fahy confided to his partner, Detective Sergeant Abraham Lipowsky, when he rejoined the latter on the sidewalk. "She takes no chances on being seen in long, earnest conversation with a strange man, so she had the dope all typed out 'n' waitin' for us. 'Pleased to meet you, Goodby,' says she."

He tore open the envelope and read to Lipowsky:

"Colorado Charley and Mae are due in Pilarcitos at 9:32 tonight. They will probably go direct to Mr. Clarke's house, a shingled bungalow, at No. 302 C street, corner of Hazel drive."

"At seven o'clock tonight Mr. Clarke will leave his home to take me to dinner. He will not return until shortly after ten o'clock. As soon as he has left the house his colored servant will go uptown to spend the evening. You can gain entrance to the house by using a skeleton key on the kitchen door, the lock of which is simple and old-fashioned, since burglars seldom operate in Pilarcitos."

"You can set up your dictograph behind the old hair sofa in the parlor and run your wires along the edge of the wall, draw them up back of the piano and into the window, around the back of the house to the garage. No body will disturb you there as Mr. Clarke keeps his car in an uptown garage."

"When Mr. Clarke drops me at my house and proceeds to the uptown garage, I will come over to his garage with a large flashlight torch, a stenographer's notebook and several sharp pencils. The fender of the sliver will serve as a desk. I will knock twice on the door—a pause between each rap. The rest I leave to you."

"Well, what do you know about that dame?" said Detective Sergeant Lipowsky.

"I'd ask her to marry me if I stood a Chinaman's chance—which I don't," Detective Sergeant Fahy replied sadly.

Promptly at seven o'clock Elmer called for Nellie and carried her off to Joe Angellotti's road house for dinner. Not once during the ride out did Nellie refer to Elmer's unfortunate predicament; seemingly she was not interested in it and not until they were halfway through dinner did Elmer broach the subject himself.

"Can't linger to do any dancing here tonight, Nellie. I must get home early."

Nellie seemed disappointed, so he hastened to excuse his action.

"I'm afraid I'm in for a bad hour between nine and ten tonight, Nellie. I had a wire from Doris Gatewood this morning. She's coming up to see me and she asked me to be at home tonight."

"Now, what do you suppose she wants?" Nellie's tones were freighted with languid interest. She helped himself to an olive and ate it with relish. Elmer, watching her sharply, was reassured.

"I'm Detective Sergeant Fahy, From Los Angeles," He Announced.

"Well, of course, in so far as that young lady is concerned I've done an about-face, so I suppose she wants an explanation."

"She doesn't want any explanation. She doesn't even want your affection. All she's after is your cash."

"Well, of course, I did promise her the thousand dollars; I dare say she predicated certain payments on that promise and my reversal of form has probably embarrassed her greatly."

"I'm a little sorry the lady lost, but a little glad I won't. Of course," he added parenthetically, "I never was the least bit in love with her. She went to my head, like champagne, when I was with her, but when I wasn't I found it hard to keep up steam. Nellie, I must have been crazy to tell you to play second fiddle."

"If we are to be judged by the worst we do in this world, Elmer, we'd all be out of luck. Now, when I look over my mental ledger account with you, I see a long string of golden credits—page after page of them—and on the debit side I find one little human entry under the explanatory head of Doris Gatewood. 'This lone debit item is composed of equal parts of blindness, repression, curiosity, stupidity, flattery and original sin. You didn't fall without a battle and when you fell you hurt everything that was fine and decent in you—and knew it. You weren't really happy in your new conquest. You only told yourself you were. And as for little Nellie Cathcart thinking for an infinitesimal fraction of a second that she could pos-

Average Length of Life Constantly on Increase

Figures based on the census of 1920 show that the expectation of life in the United States at birth is 66.4 years (65.3 for males and 67.5 for females). About 50 years ago it was only 40 years. The World Almanac quotes Dr. Louis Dublin, insurance statistician, as saying that the expectation of life has increased but the span of life has remained stationary. He states: "That 20 years have been added to the average length of human life since public health work began to be actively practiced in the early eighties of the last century is true. But this gain can be traced to the reduced mortality of infants and to the cutting down of the unnecessary and preventable deaths of young people from typhoid fever, diphtheria, scarlet fever, smallpox and a host of other diseases which, for the most part,

Later

Sooner, after rushing home from school soon for his luncheon, was reminded that he had forgotten to return thanks and mother insisted he do it even though he had eaten. He replied: "No, mother, I haven't time now; I'll just say it twice for supper."

Almost

They had been girl chums, so Farnetta spent the day with Anna recently. Elizabeth, Anna's five-year-old daughter, explained matters to her "Aunt Farnetta," as she called her. She said:

"Mother and I worked far into the night last night, and got the house all cleaned up, except for the dirt under the piano."

sibly descend to playing second fiddle to that baby-faced doll—well, Elmer, you are a sweet fool! Why, I'm the whole orchestra. I suppose, Elmer, it never occurs to you that I am a designing, scheming, farseeing, selfish girl where you are concerned."

He laughed derisively. "Tell me another joke," he pleaded.

"You're a hopeless idiot, Elmer. You will persist in making an angel out of a human being. Well, have one little dance with me and then we'll go home and commence your education."

When Elmer dropped Nellie off at her home he had the audacity, the monumental masculine assurance, to attempt to claim a good night kiss. Nellie laughed at him. "I'll not kiss you good night," she declared, "because I'm not particularly desirous of kissing you and you've forfeited the right to ask it." He drove away chafing to a degree.

The instant his car had turned the corner Nellie came out of the house and ran all the way to within a block of Elmer's bungalow. As she passed down C street and turned into Hazel drive she observed a man and woman seated on Elmer's front steps, with a suitcase and a bag reposing beside them. Elmer's garage stood at the rear of the lot and opened on Hazel drive, so Nellie walked boldly up to the door, gave the prearranged signal and was accorded instant admittance.

"They're waiting for him," said Detective Sergeant Fahy out of the corner of his mouth.

"I saw them. Elmer will be along in five minutes," Nellie gasped. "Is everything all right?"

"Right as a fox," said Detective Sergeant Lipowsky.

"Elmer will come down C street in the direction of Hazel drive. He's expecting them so there will not be any talk on the porch. He'll take them inside immediately. However, one or both of you might go out to the corner of the house and listen."

The two detectives waited five minutes and followed her suggestion. Presently they returned on velvet feet. "All he said was 'Good evening. Please come inside and we'll talk.' All the woman said was: 'You know it!'"

Nellie wrote that brief record in shorthand. Detective Sergeant Fahy clamped the receivers over her ears and held the flashlight for her as she spread her note book out on the front fender of the sliver, leaning over it and prepared to take dictation. The two detectives were also listening in.

Elmer unlocked his front door, switched on the light and walked on into his bedroom to put away his overcoat and hat before returning to the stuffy little parlor where his Nemesis awaited him. Nellie thrilled with a vast pride as his first words came clearly to them via the concealed dictograph. The eyebrows of the two detectives went up and Detective Sergeant Fahy dropped his prognathous jaw in a comical grimace, for without an instant's hesitation Elmer had seized the initiative by going directly to the attack.

"Well, Colorado Charley, old settler," he began blithely, "how about a little drink to wash the dust of travel out of your lying throat? I mean a drink of water. I wouldn't waste liquor on a skunk like you."

"Say, y," Colorado Charley came back at him, "where do you get that stuff?"

"Drive it out of a faucet," chirped Elmer cheerfully. "Doris, or whatever your real name is, you wired me for a conference, but you didn't tell me this confidence man was coming with you. Let's understand each other, Doris. Your boy friend here is out of the picture. Charley, if I fancy one heap out of you I'll knock you for a double loop. That being clearly understood, say your say, Doris, and then get to blazes out of here before I throw you out."

Followed about five seconds of profound silence, then:

"Hands up, Charley, my boy! Don't pull the gun—please. There, that's much more sensible. You don't suppose I'd be boob enough to go into conference with Doris, in your presence, without hearing myself, do you? Stand up now and back slowly toward me while I help myself to that little pistol of yours. Here's the gun, Charley. I'll keep the cartridges. Well, Doris, dear old light of my life, you were about to say something!"

What Would Happen?

"You know," said old Bill Tomaine, president of the Spit and Argy club and a philosopher of wide renown, as he slumped down to get a good seat on a sunny curbstone for the parade, "you know, I have often wondered why I like parades so much, and at last I know. It's because when the fire trucks are in the parade I am always wondering what will happen if an alarm comes in."—Emporia Gazette.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Member of Faculty, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)

Lesson for February 28

JESUS RAISES LAZARUS FROM THE DEAD

LESSON TEXT—John 11:1-57.

GOLDEN TEXT—Jesus said unto her, I am the resurrection, and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Makes a Dead Man Live Again.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Gives Life to His Friend.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus the Giver of Life.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Christian Assurance of Immortality.

I. Lazarus Sick (vv. 1, 2).

Even those who are in close fellowship with the Lord are not immune from sickness.

II. Martha and Mary Send for Jesus (v. 3).

Because they had come to know Jesus as more than a mere man, they instinctively turned to him when the shadow of death fell across their home. Those who receive Jesus into their home when all are well and happy can be sure of his love and sympathy when sickness and death overtake them.

III. Jesus' Strange Delay (vv. 4-6).

Martha and Mary sent for Jesus because he loved Lazarus. They said, "He whom thou lovest is sick." Observe that when Jesus heard that Lazarus was sick he "abode in the same place" because he loved Lazarus and his sisters (v. 5). This mystery is to be explained by the fact that Jesus was divine and knew all things.

IV. Jesus Goes to the Bethany Home (v. 7-17).

Jesus knew, and apparently the disciples knew, that going into Judea at that time meant his own death. He told his disciples that his purpose in going was to awaken Lazarus out of his sleep to the intent that they might believe (vv. 11-15). Jesus fearlessly discharged his duty even though his life had been threatened.

V. Jesus Teaching Martha (vv. 18-27).

As he was nearing the village, Martha met him with a complaint because of his delay. He ignored her complaint and taught her concerning the resurrection and life.

1. "Thy brother shall rise again" (v. 23). Most blessed words are these to fall upon the ears of a sister sorrowing for a dead brother.

2. "I am the resurrection and the life" (vv. 25, 26). He is the source of life and all who are joined to him by a living faith experience such a vital fellowship as to be unaffected by any bodily change, death being but an incident in the course of an endless life.

VI. Jesus Weeping With Mary (vv. 28-35).

Mary fell at Jesus' feet uttering the words used by Martha but no doubt with a different tone of voice and attitude. She had been sitting at his feet in the days of sunshine, therefore, she knew where to go in time of sorrow. Being a real man, he suffered with these bereaved sisters, and though he knew the joy that was soon to come in the restoration of life to Lazarus, he wept.

VII. Jesus Raising Lazarus (vv. 36-44).

In this stupendous miracle we see an illustration of the quickening into life of those dead in trespasses and sins. Observe:

1. Lazarus was dead (v. 39). This is a type of the sinner dead in trespasses and sins, even morally corrupt (Eph. 2:1).

2. The stone must be rolled away (v. 38). As Christian workers we should remove every obstacle from between a dead sinner and a life-giving Saviour.

3. Martha's protest of unbelief (v. 39). She insisted that Lazarus had already undergone putrefaction. Christ is able to save the sinner regardless of the degree of his sins.

4. Christ's intimate and fellowship with the father (v. 42). In his prayer he declared that it was not for his sake that he prayed but for those who stood by.

5. Christ's manner of dealing with Lazarus (v. 43). It was by a call: "He is calling men and women today by his Spirit, Word, and providence."

6. The response of Lazarus (v. 44). This shows that the will of Jesus is with authority and power.

7. The command to the people (v. 44). They were to remove the grave clothes and set him free. They could not make Lazarus live, but they could remove the grave clothes which bound the man whom Christ made alive.

VIII. The Effect of This Miracle (vv. 45-57).

1. Some believed (v. 45).

2. His enemies sought to put him to death (vv. 46-53).

3. His withdrawal (v. 54).

Detectives Thursday claimed confessions from two negroes, implicating a third negro, that they had plotted to rob the auto license bureau of the office of Secretary of State Frank May, Jr., last Tuesday morning. Detectives said the men declared they expected to obtain between $50,000 and $80,000 in the robbery. Carpenter said, however, that on the busiest days his office never handled more than $10,000.

Mrs. John Gablic, of St. Joe received a Niles, Mich., newspaper clipping Thursday in which it gave an account of the death of an old neighbor, Jack Peak, who burned to death in his barn on Tuesday. Some five years ago Mr. and Mrs. Gablic lived at Niles and Mr. Peak came to their home frequently. He was 64, and was a horse trainer. When his barn was discovered on fire he succeeded in saving two horses and he went in the barn to remove his prize stallion, and the fire shut him in, and he was burned to death. Two dogs, a goat, 20 chickens and 35 rabbits were burned. Mr. Peak came from England about 20 years ago.

The oration contest sponsored by the state bar association for DeKalb county, was held last Thursday evening at the court house in Auburn, and Joe Rainier of Auburn was chosen as the winner. The other two schools in the contest were represented by Chester Lung of Garrett, whose subject was the same as that of the Auburn young man, "Personalities in the Constitutional Convention." Frederick Laub, of Spencerville on "The Constitution in the Daily Life of the Individual." Emerson Aldrich, of Butler, was not able to appear as he broke one of his legs. The standing of the contestants other than Rainier was, Laub second, and Lung third.

Health and Happiness via Home Garden Route

Plan now the Summers Food Supply

By T. E. MYERS, County Agricultural Agent
of DeKALB COUNTY

Now is the time to plan the summer's food supply via the garden route, if you want it to be filled with joyous surprises. While winter winds blow, sit down around the table with the family and plan the 1932 garden. Then determine the kinds and amounts of seed, and order early is the suggestion of T. E. Myers, County Agr. Agent of DeKalb County.

How much of each vegetable are you going to plant? A mistake you may have made the past season was to plant too much of some vegetables and not enough of others. Provide for needs of your family in the row you allow for each vegetable.

With last year's plan in mind, you can place the crops on the different section of the garden than they were last summer. Rotate your crops. That is, plan to put tomatoes where your cabbage was planted, cabbage where there were tomatoes, and so on.

Always plan to plant in rows rather than in beds; and so not make paths through the garden unless necessary. If your plot is large enough for wheel hoe cultivation, run the rows the long way of the garden.

How should the various crops be grouped? Perennials such as asparagus or rhubarb should be placed at one side; next to them the group of earliest vegetables such as early radishes, early peas, leaf lettuce or early turnips; next the groups that you will plant a few weeks later such as onions, chard, and cabbage, then the ones that you will plant when the weather starts to get warm such as bush string beans; finally the rows of tomatoes, peppers, cucumbers and squash.

In your plan, make provision for the sowing of companion and succession crops. Arrange your plan so that when one crop is harvested another vegetable can be sown between the old rows or new plantings in the space vacated. Do not be content to raise a single crop, when two or three are possible.

If there is a variation in the soil in different parts of the garden, that must be considered. If part of your soil is higher and drier than the rest, plant your early crops there to give them the advantage of quick warm soil.

Grow a large enough garden to supply the family with both summer and winter vegetables.

(If you wish a copy of suggested plan for the home or farm garden, a trip or letter to County Agr. Agent's office will bring it.)

EDITED BY DOROTHY EDMONDS

A New Kind of Cross-Word Puzzle

The definitions below represent words of three letters each. Write them in the spaces on the sign-board, and be sure that the letters already there will fit in.

- To inquire.
- Having eaten.
- A male human being.
- A great noise.
- The last of anything.

Questions:

- Why do lobsters turn red when they're boiled?
- Why is medicine unpleasant?
- How many volcanoes are there in the world?
- What is a sea-mew?

Answers:

- The pigment or brown color in the lobster's shell undergoes a chemical change when it's heated and it turns red.
- Usually because what it's made of is given to you plain, or in larger quantities than you would naturally eat. Many things that we eat or like with our food would be just as horrid in a different form. A little salt makes food delicious, but if you ate a handful of salt plain it would be nasty. Pimientos in salad taste pleasantly, yet if you ate them as red peppers, you'd not like them at all. And yet, dear reader, did you ever count how many really nice medicines there are—chocolate-covered and sweet and sugary?
- There are sixty-six active volcanoes in the world.
- Sea-mew is another name for a sea gull. Listen to the sea gull sometime when he stands on a rock fishing for his dinner or quarreling with some other and you may hear that queer crying mew that gives him his other name.

HOW IT STARTED

By JEAN NEWTON
TO BE A "PLUNGER"

"HIS is a plunger" we occasionally hear of a man who, paradoxically speaking, rather than gamble conservatively stakes all or most of what he has at the moment in a reckless effort to gain his objective by the grace of good luck.

While the literal significance of the term "plunger" is at once apparent, it is to the ear of Hastings, historically, that we must give credit for its widespread use in the sense already noted.

For it is authoritatively stated that the earl of Hastings was the first gambler to be called a "plunger." This occurred after he had played and lost three games of checkers for the equivalent of $5,000 each. He then cut a pack of cards for the equivalent of $2,500 a cut—losing about $25,000 within an hour and a half.

His friends and onlookers dubbed him a plunger and soon the term got into general circulation with the meaning indicated.

U. S. Revenue Dropped

Off Billion in 1931

Washington.—Internal revenue collections dropped more than a billion dollars in 1931 as compared with 1930, the Treasury department reported. Tax revenues from all sources last year amounted to $1,914,054,022 while in 1930 they totaled $2,932,000,000. The biggest drop was in income taxes, though revenues from this source still accounted for most of the receipts. The report shows a total of $1,308,-

LIGHTS of NEW YORK

Although we watched it rise, story by story, and although it is only a comparatively short distance from where we live, we never until recently visited the tower of the Empire State building. That is, of course, because we happen to dwell in New York. There are many things in the city which no resident knows half as much about as does some visitor from thousands of miles away. Nor is that peculiar to this portion of the country. We met a man the other day, who has lived for years in Seattle and never has seen Rainier park. We know Chicagoans who never have been inside the Field museum.

Once having reached the top of the Empire State, we were sorry we had not gone before. From street level, New York is a pretty impressive place. From that tower, it looks like something a child has constructed of blocks. The transatlantic liners, lying at their toy docks, are little boats one might sail in a bathtub. And man raised that building, beam by beam and stone by stone. It was something of an achievement.

You may say that Mt. Everest is almost twenty-five times as high. Man did not raise that and from its peak the Empire State might not look like much. That is true enough, but men in airplanes have been higher than Mt. Everest. Considering that only a short while ago, as time is measured, the highest man ever got was to the top most limb which would bear his weight, he has done pretty well. If he keeps on, he may get somewhere.

Yet, looking down from that tower at the largest city on this continent, at the cars which look like a procession of crawling ants, and the pedestrians who look like fly specks, makes man feel a bit humble, a little more doubtful of his individual importance to the universe. They say that, even from the top of the Empire tower, the stars still look pretty far away.

The things that interested us about the Empire State tower were not the facts told by the books for sale in the observation room. We don't care much how many pounds of steel or how

TONSorial "SCHOOL" FOR INDIANS

It would make anybody's hair stand on end to see this line of redskins calmly "scapling" their helpless victims—unless he was told that the future barbers are merely getting instruction in the tonsorial art from Uncle Sam. The school, where the Indian boys are learning to wield a comb, shears, and razor instead of scalping knife and tomahawk, was opened recently and is appropriately located in Chemawa, Ore., where the Chemawa Indian school, second largest in the United States, is also situated.

ize they are proceeding rapidly upward. Some of the men who run them told me that they never had experienced any feeling of rising suddenly to a height.

The attendants at the top admitted that they answer hundreds of questions daily. Visitors usually wish to know whether the tower sways and ask concerning the wind velocity. There are instruments in the tower which measure both these things.

One thing we noticed was that smoking was permitted on the open terraces which surround the lower observation room. Having peered at the human race for some time, we suspected visitors might be seized with an irresistible desire to flick cigarette butts over the restraining wall toward the street far below. But those we saw never did this. Perhaps they felt close enough to the sky to be careful of their manners.

Visitors with whom we ascended in the elevators evidently expected to feel the ascent. One passenger opened his mouth and put his fingers to his ears, but we could discover little or no sensation due to the ride. The elevators run so smoothly that you do not real-

SOUTHERN CITY TO HAVE FINEST INLAND HARBOR

Scene in the present harbor at Memphis, Tenn., where will be built what is to be the world's finest inland harbor, costing $100,000,000. City, federal and commercial interests are co-operating in this gigantic enterprise. 935,407 in income taxes was collected last year as compared with $2,332,998,393 in 1930.

Of this amount $800,508,537 was collected from corporations and $537,429,829 from individuals in 1931. During 1929 from individuals corporations paid $1,000,372,011. This shows a drop of almost 50 per cent in income taxes paid by individuals.

"CATERPILLAR" TRACTOR AIDS SNOWBOUND SHEEP

When the snow lies deep on the range the Bar Z ranch in central Oregon uses a homemade snow plow on its "caterpillar" tractor as a means of clearing runways for stranded sheep, in order that they may exercise. The tractor is also used to haul feed to the herd, as shown above.

The Kitchen Cabinet

The salad is a very important part of the child's diet, as it provides the vitamins and mineral elements so necessary for health and growth. Green salads and fruit are well liked by children and when dressed with a tasty dressing are rarely refused. Oranges, containing the valuable vitamin C, make an ideal fruit to serve the child. They are always in season and need no cooking.

Dessert Salad.—Take one and one-half cups of orange pieces, one and one-half cups of banana cut into pieces, one-third of a cup of seedless raisins, four marshmallows cut into bits. Steam the raisins and mix the fruit with:

Golden Salad Dressing.—Take three-fourths of a cup of lemon juice, three-fourths of a cup of sugar, two beaten eggs, cook over water until smooth. Add whipped cream for variety. Use a bit of salt if needed.

For young children use the marshmallow as a garnish with raisins for eyes, nose and mouth in a round marshmallow.

Fairy Ring Salad.—Arrange sections of oranges, saving all the juice, on a lettuce covered salad plate. Put the centers with sliced pineapple, or banana, tablespoons of dates, chopped pecan meats, four steamed prunes stuffed with cottage cheese.

Fruit Salad Dressing.—Melt one-

Denver Boy is a Winner

Every mother realizes how important it is to teach children good habits of conduct but many of them fail to realize the importance of teaching their children good bowel habits until the poisons from decaying waste held too long in the system have begun to affect the child's health.

Watch your child and at the first sign of constipation, give him a little California Fig Syrup. Children love its rich, fruity taste and it quickly drives away those distressing ailments, such as headaches, bad breath, coated tongue, biliousness, feverishness, fretfulness, etc. It gives them a hearty appetite, regulates their stomach and bowels and gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to get normally, of their own accord. For over fifty years, leading physicians have prescribed it for half-sick, bilious, constipated children. More than 4 million bottles used a year shows how mothers depend on it.

Mrs. C. G. Wilcox, 3855 1/2 Wolff St., Denver, Colorado, says: "My son, Jackie, is a prize winner for health, now, but we had a lot of trouble with him before we found his trouble was constipation and began giving him California Fig Syrup. It fixed him up quick, gave him a good appetite, made him sleep fine and he's been gaining in weight right along since the first few days, taking it."

To avoid inferior imitations of California Fig Syrup, always look for the word "California" on the carton.

Surnames at Standstill

Surnames are not multiplying at any great rate at the present time. The civilized nations of the world have adopted surnames of the past and chances are infrequent. In the United States, foreigners who become naturalized often change their names or Anglicize them.

SPENCERVILLE HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

News Events of Interest to the Public
In General

Last Friday the class in Home Relations put on a demonstration of the wrong way and the right way to do a thing in order to rank a gentleman or a lady. There were ten incidents or episodes: one was to illustrate courtesy to the aged; another, correct school dress; another, politeness via telephone, and others representing common every day occurrences. The assembly appreciated the little playette.

Monday afternoon a short "George Washington" play was put on by the members of History class grades seven and eight. The outstanding negro characters were, Jasper, Lee Chapman; Jessie, the nurse, Alice Hart; Sally, girl of Petty Washington in mischievous role; Florence Worden. Others of the cast were Martha Washington, Margaret Walter; George Washington, Warren Rectenwall; brothers of George, John, Sam, and Charles, Kenneth Means, Fred Steward and E. L. Saur. The children enjoyed the old fashioned dresses, muskets and peculiar English. The cast was assisted by two patriotic selections from the high school orchestra.

The Senior class went to Fort Wayne last Thursday afternoon and had their photographs taken. The proofs were received Monday and they were the cause of much discussion. In a few weeks we will have the finished product back for more discussion.

The Junior High basketball team went to Auburn last Saturday for the preliminary elimination tournament. In their first game they were victorious over Mooresville 25 to 12. In their second game they were victorious over West Richland 32 to 9. Next Saturday the boys go to Butler to play in the tournament. Their opponent will be Waterloo. We hope they are successful.

THE STORY OF DATES

From Home Economics Department

In the hot, dry lands of deserts and caravans, and in the land of pyramids and mummies, grows that stately tree which constantly appears in poetry and proverbs of the east, the date palm. On that tree at a distance of fifty, sixty, or even a hundred feet from the ground, grow golden bunches of a fruit which for more than a century has been one of the principal articles of food for the brown-skinned people of the lands of Northern Africa and Southwestern Asia. The date palm is probably the oldest cultivated tree known to history. It is cultivated in China, Italy, Spain and France, and to some extent in the Southwestern part of United States.

The tall, straight stem, nearly the same thickness throughout its length, throws from its summit a magnificent crown of large feathery shaped leaves, which have been used in the religious services of Pagans, Jews, and Christians from earlier times. There also appears the inconspicuous flowers. The flower stalks bear twenty or twenty-five bunches, of from 180 to 200 dates.

These palms begin to bear from six to ten years after planting, and a single tree produces from 100 to 600 pounds of fruit every year. They require a hot, dry climate having an average temperature of 90 degrees F for three months of the year. A sandy alkaline soil is satisfactory.

The fruit is a light golden color when on the tree but most people know it by its dry form, as an oblong, fleshy, sweet fruit, about two inches, deep russet in color.

The food value is high, their nutritive qualities being equal to those of wheat and corn flour. Besides the food value of dates, there are many economic values credited to the date palm. A liquor resembling wine is made from dates by fermentation. The trunk of the tree is used for fuel, the leaves are used for matting, baskets, and bags, the fiber, in making ropes. The buds are eaten as a vegetable. When roasted, the fruit stones are used as a substitute for coffee, and when ground, they yield an oil. When the oil has been extracted, the remaining substance is valued as food for cattle.

There are various ways of preparing dates for the table. They are as follows — stewed, raw, white flour date muffins, date and peanut butter sandwiches, dark date bread, date cookies, and many others, too numerous to mention.

Dates are a fairly concentrated source of energy, or fuel for the human body. The popular package of pitted dates have approximately 713 calories, about 90 per cent of which are derived from sugar. The fiber aids in the elimination of waste materials from the intestinal tract. As a fruit rich in carbohydrates dates are banned from the diet of people with diabetes. They should be eaten in limited amounts by those who are over weight. (They yield 20 to 25 calories) while a chocolate peppermint yields 50 to 100 calories. Therefore you should eat dates in the place of so many sweets.

POTATOES

From the Foods Department

To Sir Walter Raleigh belongs the honor of first making the potato popular—and to our own Luther Burbank we are indebted for the potato's development in size and quality. If you were to travel through the countries of the temperate zone, you would find that potatoes were served from one to three times daily in most of the homes. In the North, Irish potatoes are most common while in the South sweet potatoes are most common.

Irish potatoes are planted in the spring as soon as the danger of frost is past. They grow best in rich sandy loam that is well drained. The land should be plowed as deeply as possible without turning up the subsoil. The tubers are usually planted in drills wide enough apart to admit cultivation with the horse, hoe, or cultivator, and from twelve to sixteen inches apart in the row.

The cuttings are usually covered about four inches deep. Planting is usually done by hand but where this crop is raised on a large scale potato planters are used. After planting, the soil is harrowed frequently until the plants are all up, when the cultivator is used until the vines shade the ground.

The most common enemy of the potato is the potato bug, which eats the leaves of the plant. Some of the diseases of the potatoes are: potato blight, potato rot, and black wart.

When the stalks die, the potatoes are ready to dig. They are dug with a fork, plow or potato digger. The potatoes are then sorted. The smaller ones are sometimes fed to live stock. The large and medium sized ones are put in crates or sacks and sold; or if they are to be kept over winter, they are put in the cellar or buried in the potato field. They should not be allowed to sprout because this causes the potatoes to wither. In Germany, potatoes are kept by drying but this destroys the vitamins.

Owing to the large content of starch, potatoes are healthful and are easily digested and excellent as heat and energy producers. They also contain a notable amount of protein which is of exceptionally high value. Dr. Kellogg has found that potato starch digested in ten minutes after eating, while cereal starch takes from one to three hours to be completely digested. A single ounce of potatoes affords more than twenty-four calories of nutritive material. It is rich in soda, potash, alkaline salts, and some vitamins.

The manner of cooking the potato is a matter of much importance. If the peeled potato is left set in cold water, there is a great loss of protein. The best way to cook potatoes is baking, especially if the skins are eaten. Potatoes are good when combined with other food such as cheese.

Some people have found a way to start a new variety of potatoes by planting from the seed. If you happen to find a potato ball (they grow on the plant) from your crop you should let it get ripe and plant it.

This ball is filled with little seeds which sprout and grow little plants. These should be planted and if so they will have little potatoes. If you plant these for seven years you will have a new variety of potatoes.

The sweet potato grows best in a warm climate, but aside from this, the same conditions that are best for the Irish potato is best for the sweet potato.

Sweet potatoes are planted by setting out plants that are grown from the old potato. These plants are planted in hills about four inches high. These are dug in the same way as the Irish potato. Sweet potatoes do not keep as well as the Irish potato.

The sweet potato contains more dry matter than the Irish potato and six per cent sugar. It contains the same amount of starch but more fat and protein.

Yams are the tropical substitute for the potato. These roots are larger, similar in structure, but coarser, and less palatable, than either the white or sweet potato.

COUNT YOUR CHICKS BEFORE THEY HATCH

(By Prof. A. G. Phillips)

They say that what we don't know doesn't hurt, but in business it has been found that what we don't know is the thing that really hurts. The same is true in making our plans for raising chicks this spring. We must know as nearly as possible, in advance, as to what is likely to happen. I even go so far as to oppose an old adage and say "Do Count Your Chicks Before They Are Hatched."

The more accurately you analyze and figure out results before they happen, the more nearly will they work out as you want them. No one can be accurate and we have only the history behind us to help foretell the future.

I suggest that you plan on setting five eggs or purchasing three chicks for every GOOD pullet you want to raise and put in your laying house. Figure on a 60% hatch, a 20% mortality of chicks, a fifty-fifty ratio between sexes, and a 20% culling of pullets in the fall. These are safe estimates. Very often you will do much better and will be financially ahead by so doing.

Plan the feeding program so as to mature Leghorn pullets in five and a half to six months, and heavier birds in six to seven months. Do not grow them so rapidly that they will become sexually mature before they are of the desired and proper size.

Estimate for Leghorns that it will take for every pullet grown to twenty weeks of age, amounts of feed as follows:

0 to 6 weeks, 2 pounds, Starting Mash.
6 to 12 weeks, 5 pounds, Growing Mash.
12 to 20 weeks, 6 pounds, Growing Mash and 6 pounds Grain.

These figures are sufficiently accurate to enable a person to figure his feeding requirements for the chick growing season.

If you are growing heavy broilers in batteries, you can figure on the birds consuming from five to five and a half pounds of broiler mash in the first eight weeks. Make this at least seven pounds for the first ten weeks.

We can count and figure in advance. It will pay dividends to do so.

ANOTHER NEWVILLE GIRL ASKING FOR DIVORCE

Allegations of cruelty and neglect are made by Augusta Belt of Newville, in suing Orval Belt in the DeKalb circuit court for a divorce.

The plaintiff, whose attorney is Capt. H. C. Springer, says that she and her husband were married September 27, 1930, and that the separation took place last December 15.

It is charged in the complaint that the defendant frequently struck his wife and swore at her; that he is lazy and refuses to work, failing to provide her with the necessities of life; that she is in ill health, but that her husband did not furnish her with food and that she had to go to the home of her parents to recover.

The court is asked to restore the plaintiff's maiden name, Augusta Cole.

MARCH 1—THE ASSESSOR, QUESTIONS TO ANSWER

March 1st is here—and it is now time for the assessor to start out, and here is a list of questions he may ask you:

How old was your father the day your mother was born?
How many people do you owe in this township and do you ever expect to pay them?

Have you worked the roads this spring or did you lie out of it?
How many dogs have you on the farm upon which you have never paid any tax?

How many other taxable animals, such as cats, goats, monkeys, and beasts of burden not heretofore listed?

What breed of flees does your dog prefer?
Have you any Belgian hares, if so how many have been naturalized?

Have you a typewriter, and if so, what sex?
Do you smoke cigarettes or walk in your sleep?

Name your children, give the cost of each.

Are you in love and if so, with whose wife?

Were you born in the United States or Kansas?

Is your watch a stem winder or a self binder, and from whom did you steal it?

Are you opposed to Women's Rights, and if so, why are you baldheaded?

Do you believe in signs, and if not make your mark.

MARK SHULL HANGS SELF AT FORT WAYNE

The body of Mark B. Shull, aged 37, night watchman, at the Standard Oil company bulk station, at Fort Wayne, was found hanging in the company garage at 6:30 A. M. Tuesday.

A verdict of suicide was returned in the case by Deputy Coroner Walter E. Kruse following an investigation.

Shull had evidently fastened one end of a rope he found in the garage to a chain hoist after climbing on an oil truck, then knotted the other end about his neck and stepped off. Both hands were tied in front of him with a loose knot of the same piece of rope. It was first believed that Shull had met with foul play because of the fact that his hands were tied when found, but on investigation, it was found that he had left a note in his pockets and that he probably tied the knot around his hands to take up the slack in the rope.

The note found in his pockets said, "I am maintaining my innocence," and signed "M. B. Shull." Standard officials said that Shull had been questioned concerning the explosion of an oil burner at the plant Sunday morning, but that he had not been accused of being responsible for it, although he seemed to believe that he had and worried over the affair.

That Shull contemplated taking his own life Monday when he left for work at 5:30 P. M. is believed by police, who learned that he had made a special effort to bid each member of his family good-bye before he left home.

Mark was the son of Mrs. T. H. Shull of east of town, and for many years taught school in the county. He lived in the vicinity of Moores for a few years before going to Fort Wayne. The news of his death came as a shock to the entire community, being well and favorably known here.

The funeral will be held from the home church at Coburntown, Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock, E. R. Kinsey having charge.

LIQUOR RAID YIELDS SEVERAL VIOLATORS

Following liquor raids in DeKalb county Friday by federal prohibition agents and local officers, arraignments were made in the DeKalb circuit court Saturday as follows:

Owen Stiles of 706 East Keyser Street, Garrett, on a charge of illegal possession.

His wife, Alma Stiles, for illegal sale to Lysle A. Robinson last December 8.

Alva McDanel of four miles south of Garrett on Road 27, for illegal possession.

His wife, Mary McDanel, for a sale to Robinson last December 2.

Mrs. Edith Steffen, wife of Chas. Steffen, residing at Indiana Avenue and Twentieth Street, Auburn, for a sale to Robinson last December 9.

Arthur Bailey of two miles north of Auburn, for a sale to Robinson last December 8.

Robinson is a federal officer, located at South Bend. Nine raids were participated in by twelve federal men, divided into squads. However, no evidence was found at some of the places visited.

The officers reported finding a half gallon of liquor at the Stiles home. Attorney H. C. Springer represents them and upon his request they were given until Tuesday, March 1 to enter pleas. Bonds of $1,000 each were furnished.

Arrest of the McDanels
Officers went to the McDanel home Saturday to arrest Mrs. McDanel for selling liquor, but found 120 pints of home brew in the kitchen, so they took her husband into custody also.

McDanel is past seventy years old and crippled to such an extent that he could not walk to the court room on the third floor of the court house. Judge Endicott therefore held court for him and his wife in Sheriff John P. Hoff's office.

The affidavit against McDanel was signed by Andrew E. Flood of South Bend, also a federal dry officer. The old man promptly pleaded guilty. Judge Endicott reminded McDanel that the last time he was in court on a similar charge he suspended the sentenced on account of the defendant's physical condition. Previously McDanel had served time in jail after a jury had found him guilty.

Judge Endicott Saturday imposed a sentence of thirty-five days at the state farm and a fine of $100 and costs. Mrs. McDanel entered a plea of not guilty. She commented that she could not remember Robinson, who signed the affidavit against her. Her bond of $1,000 was furnished.

Bailey also was fined $100 and costs and was sentenced to serve thirty-five days at the state farm. Mrs. Steffen entered a plea of guilty also, but she was sent back to jail while the court has her case under consideration. She is the mother of two children, one of whom is only three years old, and it is reported the family is destitute.

While operating in DeKalb county Friday, the officers went over the line into Allen county, near Grabill, and arrested David Current and his wife, Ethel. A gallon of alcohol, a pint of moonshine, 7 gallons of wine, 76 pints of beer and 6 gallons of beer mash are reported to have been confiscated. Current and his wife were taken to Fort Wayne and were arraigned before United States Commissioner Wm. D. Remmel. Current furnished $1,000 bond and his wife was freed on her own recognizance.

TOMORROW, HATS OFF AND INTO THE RING

With March 4, tomorrow, the first day on which candidates may file their declarations, politics will no doubt form a large portion of the talk during the days to come.

Since the Republican party is hopeful of carrying the county ticket, and since their success in the past election, there will be innumerable candidates for each county office on both tickets in the primary.

The present economical situation has made the salaries attached to these offices attractive.

A couple of years ago such was not the case. Salaries ranging from $2,500 to $4,200 will now attract as many candidates as molasses will flies on a June day.

Anyone with a small following will develop ambitions, eye the salary longingly and watch to see what the other fellow is doing; then file candidacy, maybe not on March 4th but before or on April 3rd.

And if the candidate has some kick to make about the present conditions or some scheme to better them, so much the better for this is a reactionary period when people are not thinking soundly but are joining in on protests.

The high cost of education, back to the old red school house, roads are only used by tourists, salaries are too high, farm relief and poor relief, taxation and representation and every known means of calling for a following will be held up before voters by anxious candidates.

And the candidates will have to wear badges so that they will not solicit each other for votes.

Officers to be filled this fall are: prosecutor, joint senator, representative, clerk, treasurer, sheriff, two commissioners, surveyor, seven county councilmen, and Democratic and Republican delegates to the state conventions and a coroner.

Choose the office you want and maybe all the people that promise to support you may not lie. If so, you can try it all over again, later.

WILL GIVES PROPERTY TO HUSBAND

By her will probated Thursday in the DeKalb circuit court, the late Mrs. Frances M. Koch, of St. Joe, who died February 19, left all her property to her husband, John Koch, for his use during his lifetime. At his death the estate remaining is willed to a granddaughter, Vera Blanche Walter. The will was signed April 9, 1910, with D. F. Benninghoff and Amelia Benninghoff as witnesses. On March 20, 1919, Mrs. Koch executed a codicil providing that if her husband remarried half of the estate went to the granddaughter, S. S. Widney and Fred B. Leighty witnessed the codicil.

F. R. Bowman and E. R. Kinsey appeared before Judge Endicott to prove the signature of the witnesses, both being dead, while F. B. Leighty filed the will for probate, being the one living witness to the codicil.

GALLMEYER TO ADDRESS BROTHERHOOD

Officials in charge of the March meeting of the Wittenberg Brotherhood to be held at the Coburntown Church northeast of Spencerville announced today that the speaker would be E. J. Gallmeyer, Postmaster of Fort Wayne. The Association was organized in Troy Township some years ago, and the membership since that time has spread to all parts of DeKalb County. Mr. C. H. Fetter, of Butler has been President of the organization for many years.

Mr. Gallmeyer who besides being Postmaster of Fort Wayne, is the International President of the Waltham League, an organization comprising 100,000 members in all parts of America. His subject for the evening will be "WITHIN YOUR YOUTH?" He is an unusually forceful speaker, and speaks with authority on the above subject since the society which he heads is made up principally of Lutheran Youth. The committee in charge of this meeting which will be held March 9th, at the Coburntown Church, are happy to make the announcement and urge a good attendance.

A DAD'S EYE VIEW OF SCOUTING

Tell your father that Scouting is a program of interesting, useful things for boys to do in their leisure time. These boys learn the mysteries of Woodcraft, of First Aid, Swimming and Life Saving, of Outdoor Cooking and Camping, of Signaling, Map Making, Hiking and Citizenship.

Like the Red Cross, Scouting is chartered directly by Congress and the President of the United States is its "Honorary President."

The Scoutmasters are picked local men, who give their time without pay because of their interest in the boys of America.

Scouting gives boys a chance to serve their community. Its activities not only give pleasure and knowledge, but they prepare to meet community emergencies.

When tornadoes struck Omaha or Southern Illinois—when flood swept on Pueblo—when earthquake and fire hit California—when powder magazines exploded in New Jersey—the Scouts proved at once their readiness to serve.

Scouting is neither military or anti-military. It carefully avoids political or commercial entanglements.

Scouting knows no race or creed or class. Troops are found alike in Catholic Parish, Jewish Synagogue, and Protestant Church. It is available to farm or city alike. It is found in schools—it serves the rich as it serves the poor. Its aim is to help each of these boys to become the best citizen that he can make of himself.

The "Daily Good Turn" to some one is the Scout's effort to help the other fellow to also make the best of himself.

Each year new thousands upon thousands of boys join Scouting. They find not only fun, but also a real chance to be something more. Every boy really wants to "Make Good"—to amount to something—to be of value in life. The ideals of our great Americans like Washington and Lincoln and Roosevelt and Wilson (and others) stir us all to ambition and the desire to be Real Men.

Of course your father knows every man faces three big problems:

1. Mastery of his own powers, getting them keen and ready for use.
2. Getting along with other people.
3. Finding a worthy use for these powers.

The tremendous sweep of Scouting has come because it helps a boy with these problems—helps him find himself and his powers—helps him to "Be Prepared."

Your father knows that leisure time, the nothing-to-do time, can make or break any fellow. Some boys have checked up on their own time and were surprised to find that they had six or eight hours leisure time daily.

Scouting provides attractive things to do, in this spare time—things, too, that "get one somewhere."

Scouting helps the Scout to value the great heritage which the past has brought to him in the life and ideals of America, and Scouting points the way of good citizenship through service. Not "Getting" but "Giving"—not only "Receiving" but "Giving Back" something that shall, as Lincoln phrased it—"Make the world better because of our little life in it."

Our America is the "melting pot" of the world. Her strength has come from every people. Goodwill must be extended to these new citizens, indeed only as "the spirit of brotherliness" is present, can Liberty develop.

As the "Golden Rule" is extended to these other fellows—life in America gets on a sound footing.

—From Handbook for Boys.

C. O. Krise, Auburn postmaster, received a letter Monday from David Hogg, congressman of the fourth district, informing Mr. Krise that the plans for the new postoffice for Auburn will be in the hands of the contractors, the LaSalle Construction Co., of South Bend, on March 4th. The building has been held up since last fall because of a revision in the plans. The original plans called for brick with stone trim. The plans as changed specify all stone.

RIO GRANDE RIVER IS SHIFTING BOUNDARY

One Might Retire in U. S. and Awake in Mexico.

Washington.—"News that a band of mounted cattle thieves rode across the Rio Grande river from Mexico into Texas recently, probably presents a picture of this southern boundary river of the United States far different from that conjured up by a look at the map," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

"On the map the Rio Grande has the appearance, in its lower reaches, at least, of being as wide as the St. Lawrence or the Detroit rivers, along both of which large ships ply. In flood times the Rio Grande is a wide, full river; but during portions of the year, owing to little rainfall on its tributaries, seepage into the sandy soil, and appropriation for irrigation purposes, its waters dwindle away until only a narrow stream remains, dodging in and out among wide expanses of sand. Quicksands make crossing dangerous in places, but at other points it is a simple matter to ride or wade from bank to bank.

"Because the river can be so easily crossed in times of low water, United States and Mexican officials have had stubborn problems along certain sections of the Rio Grande in the enforcement of immigration, tariff, prohibition, narcotic, and other regulations. The problems are heightened by the fact that the American side of the river is not uniformly developed and that most of the Mexican side is unsettled. At some points on the American side the huge irrigated gardens and fields and citrus groves of the lower Rio Grande valley reach to the river, representing land in the highest degree of cultivation. But at other points the river bank and a zone ten miles or more in width is covered with a growth of mesquite and other bushes, and is virtually uninhabited. Chinese and other aliens secretly entering the country, and smugglers in both directions hide in these wilderness spots, and when overtaken often 'shoot it out' with members of the border patrol.

"The Rio Grande in flood times has been equally a problem to the United States and Mexico. When the river rises unduly it eats away the fine sandy alluvial soil as though it were brown sugar, frequently forcing new channels across the narrow necks where the stream flows. When this happens the bits of land cut off ('bancoas') they are called, are thrust into an alien jurisdiction. Many a river-bank resident has gone to sleep in the United States and waked up next morning in Mexico.

"All along the lower Rio Grande at one time were numerous bits of United States territory on the Mexican side of the river, and fragments of Mexico in the United States. The situation became so complicated that the two governments finally agreed that since in the long run the shifts of territory from side to side were about equal, new channels would be taken as marking the boundary, where the banks were small. It was provided, however, that if fragments of territory exceeding 618 acres or having 200 or more inhabitants shall ever be cut off by the river, they shall still belong to the country from which they were torn, the old channel remaining as the boundary."

Blind to "See" Usual Print by New Device

Paris.—Two French inventors, MM. Thomas and Conland, have devised an apparatus by which ordinary print can be made legible for the blind.

The apparatus is called the photo-electrograph. A ray of light is made to pass over the printed page and as each letter is illuminated the corresponding letter is presented in relief and in magnified form in another part of the machine, where the blind reader identifies it by touch.

Not only ordinary print, but Braille can be read with the machine. In the latter case it has the advantage that the Braille characters can be printed with ink on a smooth page and need be no larger than ordinary type, thus reducing Braille types to a convenient size and making them cheaper and easier to produce than hitherto.

Palace 3,000 Years Old Is Unearthed in Egypt

Calro.—A three-thousand-year-old palace, probably the residence of the famous Queen Nefertiti after her fall from power, has been discovered by the Egyptian Exploration society excavating at Tel-el-Amarna.

(Nefertiti was the wife of Akhenaten, the "heretic king," who preceded Tut-Ankh-Amen, his son-in-law. The famous head of Nefertiti, in painted sandstone, which was found in 1912, has been described as "perhaps the most lifelike portrait in all Egyptian art.")

Old Whipping-Post Tree

Alfred, Maine.—An oak tree which has served as a whipping post in the days of colonial blue laws is still standing here.

Prints Which Carry a New Message

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

ACCORDING to that which is to be seen in midseason and early spring fabric showings, the world of fashion is as print-conscious as ever and even more so, if that be possible. Which does not mean that "it's the same thing over again." On the contrary only those prints which carry an entirely new message qualify as chic. You can sense a this-season's print at a glance, in that its uniqueness, both as to color and design, differentiates it from a print of yesterday.

There's the new stunning striped print, for example, which designers are making up so intriguingly. They have that out-of-the-ordinary look about them which at once classifies them as being of year 1932 vintage. Most women yield to the lure of these handsome, elegant stripes at first sight. The print stripe silk which fashions the dress shown to the right in the picture is typical of the new trend. Rather a happy combination, you will agree, this of alluring stripes with colorful Paisley patterns.

These Paisley striped silks are being put to more uses than one. Many an afternoon black frock (black with a touch of color is so very smart this season) is topped with sleeves and deep yoke of striped Paisley print. Silk of this type also is made up into many a smart blouse, which worn with a black or navy blue jacket suit is rated 100 per cent modish among the new costume collections.

Then, too, a strikingly new departure in the way of printed silk is the get-together gesture which plaids and dots are making this season. The very latest in bordered silks is that of polka dot which is complemented with wide bands of printed plaid, or if the patterns be not dotted then a tiny star or conventional design contrasts the big high-colored broken plaid design. It is silk of this description which distinguishes the gown on the seated figure in the accompanying illustration. Note the new flaring cuff and the clever half-in-half plaid and dot-print revers.

Plaid-and-plaid effects, that is plaids worked together which reverse their colors, (light background for one and dark background for the other) interpret a smart spring style theme. The frock of plaid silk which is collared, cuffed and girdled with plaid which carries the same colors and design but has a dark background is one of the highlights of the new mode.

Speaking of prints in general, for daytime frocks which can be worn on the street, silks, especially crepes, with neat small patterns predominate, navy with white leading in favor. Steel-engraved prints are also included in nearly every collection. Dark lines etched on light grounds or the reverse. Among these, white roses and leaves on navy, black or brown backgrounds have a very strong appeal this season.

Large, gorgeously colorful designs, widely spaced, on white or black grounds on georgette or chiffon score for southern evening wear at the moment, their acceptance with resorters foretelling their coming summer vogue.

More than ever emphasis is being placed on print with plain combinations. The patriotic combination of red, white and blue is stressed throughout the season's showings. In most instances a light navy is chosen for the major color of the costume with red and white featuring in the scarf and accessories.

As to monochrome colored crepes which are so fashionable the rough crinkled surfaces prevail.

SMART FOR SPRING

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

SPRING FASHIONS STRESS SIMPLICITY

The best dressed woman this spring will be the one whose clothes reflect casualness and informality in creation and design.

"Simplified simplicity" was the way Rose A. Glemby, head of a buying syndicate, explained it, at the opening of the spring 1932 fashion forecast session of member stores in New York.

Miss Glemby also told the session that a sudden increase in price levels for this spring in fashion merchandise was not expected.

"From present indications the greatest volume will be done on somewhat lower price levels than spring last year," she said. "It will be necessary to stress quality, and fashion correctness, regardless of price."

Flowers to Have Chief Place in Spring Hats

Flowers are going to play a leading role in spring millinery.

Certainly, there are always some flower-trimmed hats available, but the new crop of blossoms will bloom under, not on, the hat. A much more attractive way of wearing flower trimmings and one that most cleverly combines demureness with sophistication, is a not always easy task.

All sorts of new straw weaves in the offering, but the good old standbys such as milan and picot will be most extensively used.

There will be colorful straws, straws of all hues from delicate pastel tones to vivid colors.

Popularity of Fur Has Spread Even to Blouses

The vogue for fur has spread even to blouses. One of the smartest afternoon costumes has a tunic blouse of fine black broadtail.

The tunic, which is designed with a surplus neckline, is worn with a black broadcloth skirt and tiny black belt. It has been trimmed with a band of broadtail.

Radio, Movies Creating New Standard of Speech

Detroit.—America has a new standard of speech, developed by the radio and talkie, according to Dr. Ray K. Immel, of the University of California.

Addressing the recent convention of the National Association of Teachers of Speech, Doctor Immel said the two agencies have brought about a greater uniformity in the nation's speech. He regretted that uniformity will eliminate quaint localisms.

"Laziness is one of the greatest handicaps to correct speech," Doctor Immel asserted. "Most of us are lip lazy. It's much easier sometimes to fall into the colloquial expression. Correct expression of a thought often requires effort."

The diction expert said he believed speech-consciousness is growing among the younger generation.

Ohioans to Build House of Welded Steel Sheets

Cleveland.—The world's first frameless steel house is to be erected soon in Solon, a Cleveland suburb, as an experiment which might revolutionize residential architecture.

The first unit of "mass production" by the housing by this method is projected, it was learned, by the American Rolling Mill company of Middletown, Ohio, and a Cleveland group. The house will consist of steel sheets, welded together and insulated. It will cost less than a wooden house, will have eight rooms, two baths and a two-car garage. The exterior will be of asbestos sheet and the interior of insulation board. Nearly fourteen tons of steel will go into the structure.

Inns Claim Age Record

Bristol, Eng.—Two inns here claim to be the oldest hostleries in England. The license of one of them, the Hummer Inn, was in existence in 1241. A plan of the city between 1290 and 1350, however, mentions the Full Moon hotel as "apparently a verie antique hostellerie."

Fire in Home Kept Burning 50 Years

Stateville, N. C.—The story of how Ephraim Scroggs, pioneer settler, started a fire in his home on his wedding night which he and his wife kept burning continuously for 50 years has been told here by his niece, Mrs. Ellen Lipper.

In the 50 years, she said, the couple spent one night and one day away from home, but each time the fire was so well banked it did not go out.

Prince Gets Belongings, but Alfonso's Are Held

Paris.—The Spanish Republican government has shipped several cases of clothing, household silver and other private possessions to the prince of Asturias, but it has not returned any of their personal property to former King Alfonso or Queen Victoria.

As a result of intervention by an emissary of Alfonso the government agreed to ship to the prince the silverware which was a gift from his English grandmother, Princess Beatrice. She gave him several pieces of silver each year on his birthday.

The government decided that since the silver represented a gift from a member of the family living outside

TROTZKY STRIKES AT STALIN GOVERNMENT

Deposed Leader Has Visions of Coming Back.

London.—Russia is in the throes of a serious rebellion against Stalin, the Moscow dictator.

The movement, judging from the very guarded references in the official newspapers, is directed by Trotsky, the deposed commissar for war, from his exile in Turkey.

The rank and file of the rebels, described as Trotskyites, or Left Wing-ers, have invaded every strategic point in the Soviet economic machinery and in spite of frequent arrests, have maintained their influence.

Soviet spokesmen, according to verbatim reports which have just reached the Daily Mail, openly admit that the rebels have been harassing Stalin's government for more than a year, and that their action has led to serious consequences in vital sections of the five-year plan for Russia's industrialization.

Trotsky still hopes to return to Moscow, and for this purpose keeps in touch with his Russian and foreign groups of followers. These groups, as well as Trotsky himself, are financed from a secret fund, which continues to grow. It is estimated that the Trotskyites in Russia are spending $15,000 a month on bribes and "other forms of corruption."

A private complaint of Trotsky's activities was made recently by Russia to the Turkish government, which replied that it was unable to take any action.

How greatly Stalin is perturbed by the growth of the revolt is shown by venomous attacks he has recently launched against Preobrazhensky, one of the Soviet's financial negotiators in London, whose crime, like that of Trotsky in 1925, is a book reviewing the world position. Every Soviet misfortune has been attributed to his interpretation of events.

Close observers of affairs in Russia believe that the days of the Stalin regime are numbered, and that his opponents will make a decisive bid for power when they are fully equipped and ready.

SETS ANOTHER RECORD

Eleanor Holm, United States swimming star, who added another triumph to her long list when she broke the world's mark for the 100-yard back stroke at a championship meet of the Women's Swimming association of New York. Miss Holm's new record is 1:58 2-5.

TEETHING makes HIM FUSSY

One of the most important things you can do to make a teething baby comfortable is to see that little bowels do their work of carrying off waste matter promptly and regularly. For this nothing is better than Castoria, a pure vegetable preparation specially made for babies and children. Castoria acts so gently you can give it to young infants to relieve colic. Yet it is always effective, for older children, too. Remember, Castoria contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics—is absolutely harmless. When your baby is fretful with teething or a food upset, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Be sure you get genuine Castoria with the name:

SEVERE COUGH... COULDN'T SLEEP

Logansport, Ind.—"Just the least exposure would cause me to catch cold and it would settle in my bronchials, setting up an irritation, followed by a severe cough," said Mrs. Milton Warner, of 416 Bartlett St. "I would have such severe coughing and choking spells that I would feel weak and faint afterwards. I could scarcely sleep at night for coughing, but since taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery I have not had this trouble; it strengthened my bronchial tubes and I do not catch cold nearly so easily."

CHAPTER XI—Continued

"I came to ask you why you went back on me the way you did," the girl's voice came to the listeners. It was hard and high-pitched. She was coldly furious.

"You know now why I went back on you. I don't like the company you keep."

"What's wrong with the company?"

"His police record is over there on the whatnot. Want a look at it? Perhaps you'd like to verify his photograph with the original and check up on his Bertillon measurements."

"Quit stalling, Mae, and get down to business," Colorado Charley growled testily.

"I told you, Charley, that if I heard one little peep out of you I'd knock you for a double loop," Elmer reminded his unwelcome guest. "I admit I went back on my promise to lend Doris or Mae or whatever her name is a thousand dollars, but I'm not going back on my promise to you."

There was a suppressed scream, the sound of shuffling feet, the crash of furniture—silence! Nellie trembled violently and turned a white pitiful face to Detective Sergeant Fahey, who laid his great paw on her little brown hand.

"Can the kid go some?" he demanded fiercely. "Maybe I'd better pop out an' see if Colorado Charley has done for him with a knife. He always carries one."

"Elmer can whip his weight in wildcats," Nellie faltered bravely.

"He's spittin' everything for us," Detective Sergeant Lipowsky complained bitterly. "He don't run true to form. We figured he'd wilt; figured they'd scare him to death and get all the cash he has on hand now and a promissory note for the balance, when we could nab 'em for blackmail. As it is he ain't give them a chance to make their proposition, so what've we got to hang a case on?"

"He's a bonehead!" Detective Sergeant Fahey blazed. "He's a hick! But, Lord, how I love him!" he added. Nellie looked up at him gratefully. "You're a dear," she said simply.

A voice came over the dictograph again. Elmer was speaking. "While dear Charley is wandering in dreamland, Doris, suppose you spill your bad news."

"My dear Elmer," the girl replied in dulcet tones, "we didn't come here to spill any bad news. All we wanted was an explanation of your curious and embarrassing action in ordering payment stopped on your check."

"I've explained," said Elmer grimly. "So you have, Elmer. But that alleged criminal record you allude to doesn't prove my brother is a criminal. I know he isn't. And I haven't heard you say you have a criminal record of me. If you had, I imagine you'd confront me with it."

"I haven't—but I have hopes. The unknown friend who sent me the information on Charley may develop additional interest and send me news of you."

"You seem to forget that I am your fiancée."

"You're right—I do. I never was your fiancée. I never asked you to marry me."

"Well, you certainly gave me the impression that we were engaged. The letters you wrote me will be rather hard to explain, and I'm here to tell you that no small-town shuck can treat me the way you've treated me and get away with it."

"Oh, I expected to be blackmailed under threat of a suit for breach of promise!"

"Blackmail? I have said nothing about blackmail. I am not here to threaten you, Elmer. I came up to talk the situation over sensibly."

"That isn't possible. I'm one of those fellows who will not be blackmailed, cajoled, threatened or persuaded. I know what you have in mind and a rose by any other name would smell as sweet. . . . Hello, Charley, did the little birdies sing sweetly to you while you were out? Pick yourself up off the floor, you swine, and betake yourself and your partner out of here. On your way, both of you!"

"Come, Harvey," Doris urged complacently. "I will ask Mr. Clarke to explain to me at a more appropriate time—say in the midst of his campaign for mayor. You dirty shuck," she added, her fury gaining control at last. "I'll make you feel as ridiculous as you've made me feel. That much at least I can do and you watch me do it. I didn't come here to blackmail you but—"

"Yes, yes, I know my letters to you will look silly in the public prints, but I'll be shot if I'll buy them back," said Elmer Clarke.

"No?" The girl's voice rose sneeringly. "Evidently you've forgotten all the drippy things you wrote me. I'll send you copies to refresh your memory and induce a change of mind on your part, little boy friend."

"How much do you want for them?" Elmer demanded.

"Ah-hah! So you are interested, aren't you? Well, Elmer, those letters will cost you tonight exactly five thousand dollars in cash, and a promissory note for one hundred thousand secured by an assignment of an interest for that amount in your Uncle Hiram's estate. You come to Los Angeles and my lawyer will arrange the details."

"But this is blackmail," Elmer protested.

"I dislike the word. Call it heart balm," the girl corrected him. "You can give me your check for the five thousand now. I'll take a chance on your not stopping payment this time."

"I am a high-priced writing man, am I not?" Elmer retorted good-naturedly. "Doris, dear one, I didn't have the slightest idea of capitulating. I merely had a curiosity to know what price you'd ask. Now that I know it, I'm no longer interested. Really, I wouldn't give you a canceled postage stamp for all those letters. Get out, and many thanks to you for the extremely cheap education you've lavished on me. You're the first woman I've ever made an ass of myself over, Doris, and you'll be the last. The next sweetheart I have is going to be a regular girl, Charley! Don't linger. Nighty-night!"

There was the sound of a door closing. Silence.

CHAPTER XII

Out in the garage Detective Sergeants Fahey and Lipowsky exchanged glances. "I thought the boy was going to spill the beans on us, Lippy," Fahey declared. "But at the finish he sure came through noble."

"No thanks to him," growled Lipowsky. "He was just kiddin' them. Well, we've got enough on them to make the pinch as soon as they get back to Los Angeles. No use botherin' ourselves with them now. They got return tickets."

"While Dear Charley Is Wandering in Dreamland, Doris, Suppose You Spill Your Bad News."

"Women ain't got no sense," Fahey decided. "Get 'em mad an' they'll tell everything they know—present company excepted," he added gallantly. "I don't suppose you're going to tell Elmer all you know, are yuh?"

"Indeed not! That would only embarrass him."

Lipowsky winked at Fahey. "Don't you think Elmer's awfully courageous?" Nellie pleaded. "I dunno whether he's courageous or crazy or a plain boob, but whatever makes him go the way he does, I'm for him. Well, guess our job's done—all except gettin' that dictograph out of the house."

"It's Jasper's day off tomorrow," Nellie informed him. "I'll make Elmer take me to luncheon and then you can run over and get the dictograph. If I were you I'd wind up the wire as far as the back of the house tonight; otherwise Elmer will find it in the morning. You can coil it and conceal it in the grass."

Fahey winked at Lipowsky. "Meanwhile," Nellie continued, "I'm going home. I'll send Captain Fitzgerald a copy of the transcript of my notes tomorrow. Why do you not arrest those wretches tonight?"

"We're out of our own jurisdiction. Of course we can make the pinch if you want us to, but we'll have to call in the local dicks, and then the news would be all over town in the morning. Better let us handle these birds in Los Angeles. We might get their shyster lawyer, too."

"Go to the head of the class, Mr. Fahey. Thank you very much. Good night."

She slipped noiselessly out the door into Hazel drive. On that street, midway between C and B streets, she could see a man and a woman, the man struggling along under the burden of a suit case and a bag. So Nellie crossed to the other side of Hazel drive, in order to place distance between herself and Elmer should he chance to be standing on his front porch, and hurried away in pursuit of the couple. She watched them turn in at the principal garage.

"Going to hire a car and go on to San Jose for the night," she thought. "I'll find out."

She followed boldly into the garage, not thirty feet behind them, and stood listening to Colorado Charley bargaining with the night manager for a closed car to take himself and wife to San Jose. When they started a few minutes later Nellie Cathcart hired another closed car and followed. At a third-rate San Jose hotel—which was, however, a first-class hotel in comparison with the Palace hotel in Pilarotos—Colorado Charley and his companion registered as Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Skidmore, of Los Angeles, and retired for the night.

Nellie immediately returned to Pilarotos and crept silently into the Tully home at one o'clock a.m. She did not go to bed immediately, however, but took down the telephone receiver and called for Mr. Fahey at the Palace hotel.

The detective got out of bed and came downstairs to the telephone booth.

"Fahey talkin'?"

"This is your female accomplice, Mr. Fahey. Please forgive me for getting you out of bed, but I have news of importance to communicate. I followed those people. They hired a car at the Main Street garage and Charley told Mr. Bass, the night manager, that he wanted to hire it for himself and his wife. Mark that. Himself and his wife. Go right down to see Mr. Bass and remind him that he rented a car tonight to a man and his wife and see that he remembers it so well he will not be liable to forget it."

"That wife stuff is good!"

"Well, that couple are now asleep at the Garden City hotel, in San Jose, and registered as Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Skidmore, of Los Angeles."

"Naughty, naughty!"

"This is a decent, respectable country, Mr. Fahey. We believe in conserving morals and protecting the home and we have no sympathy for strangers who play fast and loose with the reputations of our hotels. I'm scandalized."

"I'm blushing like a rose myself," said Detective Sergeant Fahey. "Now, lemme get the straight of this. About nine o'clock tomorrow mornin' them two indacent people are to board the Shore Line Limited to return to Los Angeles. Well, here's where I miss a whole lot more sleep. I suppose you want me to drive up to San Jose, have a confidential talk wit' the chief of police, an' ask him, as a courtesy to a brother chief, to pinch Charley an' his wife on a charge of social vagrancy, chuck 'em into stir an' make the ball the limit."

"That'll mean they'll have to stay in stir until they can raise bail. Maybe they can't. Maybe they ain't got friends that can be reached in a hurry. Still, that lawyer of theirs might bail them out, but on the other hand he might not. He'd probably get suspicious an' figure your little boy friend had been too smart for him."

"Why, of course he'll be suspicious an' drop that case like it was a hot stove. I'll see to that myself. I'll phone Fitzgerald an' he'll phone that lawyer an' tell him, anonymously, that his clients have got all tangled up in a dictograph, complicated with the purity squad."

"You're such a comfort, Mr. Fahey," Nellie cooed. "Of course they won't have any defense, unless they can produce a marriage certificate."

"I know they can't do that, an' if they do, their case against Elmer is a wash-out. It's a wash-out anyway. Well, little partner, we can't very well land 'em for attempted blackmail without draggin' your man into the case, so I guess we'll have to wait till next time, but in the meantime—" He paused significantly.

"Yes, yes, go on! You're doing fine, Mr. Fahey. You were about to say?"

"We'll get them a quick trial in the San Jose police court before they can get bail, find 'em guilty an' send 'em to the county jail for three months."

"Oh, make it six!" Nellie pleaded. "With credit for good behavior they'll be out altogether too soon. It only costs a few dollars to file a suit, and nothing at all for publicity. That woman will do that for revenge as she gets out, no matter what happens to her. Elmer can't afford it."

"Well, seein' as how you ask it, I'll make it six months. That's the limit. Consider it done! Me, I've been tryin' cases in the judge's chambers for ten years. That's the only way us dicks can get any justice or recognition. Good night! Sleep tight!"

A week later Nellie Cathcart received by registered mail a small cardboard box. Upon opening it she discovered it contained a small gold shield bearing the legend: "Honorary Detective Sergeant, Los Angeles Police Department." The shield bore a number also—No. 1!

In fact, that week everybody received something. Colorado Charley and Mae, to their great bewilderment, were given six months in the county jail and blamed Elmer Clarke for it. Mae even wrote to him accusing him of it but bidding him refrain from thinking he was little Jack Horner, since every dog must have his day.

Alas! Mae was counting her chickens before they were hatched, for immediately upon his return to Los Angeles, Detective Sergeant Lipowsky decided to stub his toe on the carpet. He knew a burglar who was also an expert at opening ordinary safes. So he burglarized the office of Colorado Charley's attorney, and presently Elmer Butterworth Clarke received by ordinary mail a large flat envelope. It contained his love letters to Mae, alias Doris.

Simultaneously, from another anonymous source, he received a clipping from a San Jose paper. It contained the story of the arrest and conviction of Joseph Skidmore and his companion, and since the story had been illustrated with pictures, Elmer was no longer in doubt of a very significant fact, to wit: that God had been very good to him, indeed.

Prior to the arrival of Colorado Charley and Mae at his house that night, nobody, not even astute Nellie Cathcart, could have imagined the extent of Elmer Clarke's terror and suffering. He felt exactly as he had always felt in France when his unit was in reserve but waiting to be ordered up to the front. Once under fire, however, he would say to himself: "Well, here's where I die. I can't escape this. I might as well quit worrying and make the best of it for the few minutes I may have to live. I'm not brave but I'll act as if I am."

This old comforting philosophy had animated him the moment he had come face to face with Colorado Charley and Mae. The sight of them, as a matter of fact, had infuriated him and, fury displacing fear, he had grown suddenly light-hearted. His attack had completely upset the calculations of the blackmailers; on the instant their plans crumbled. As they disappeared through his door a feeling of peace after a long settled over Elmer Clarke's sturdy soul.

Elmer Clarke retired to his virtuous couch and slept the sleep of the conscience-free and the healthy. At breakfast next morning he had a telephone call from Nellie, who declared she was simply bursting with curiosity. He must take her to luncheon that day and tell her all about his interview with those terrible people.

Elmer accepted with alacrity and when he and Nellie found themselves in a booth at the Palace they gave her a detailed account of his adventures. Nellie noticed that Elmer did not pat himself on the back.

"I was scared to death, Nellie," he confessed. "But it would never have done to let them know I was, so I bluffed my way through."

"Do you think the incident is closed?" Nellie queried innocently.

"I do not. I'm going to be the laughing stock of this town sooner or later—unless I buy those letters from them. I'm not. I'll stand for them. It will be horrible, but I'll stand for it."

"You appear to have eliminated my point of view from your considerations, Elmer. How do you know I can manage to stand up under that ridicule of you? Don't you think it will hurt me terribly?"

"Would it?" he queried eagerly. "I'd like to think so. I'd like to think you love me still, with all my faults. Do you, darling?"

"You'll have to go on guessing. I have some womanly pride, you know, and you have jarred it frightfully."

JESUS WASHES HIS DISCIPLES' FEET

LESSON TEXT—John 13:1-17.

GOLDEN TEXT—Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Washes the Disciples' Feet.

JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Performs a Humble Task.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus Disciples Lowly Service.

YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Spirit of Christianity.

I. Christ's Amazing Love for His Own (vv. 1-3).

Jesus was fully conscious of what was immediately before him. He knew that the cross with all its shame and anguish was upon him. He knew that his disciples would shamefully forsake him in a few hours. He knew that one of that number would be the instrument in the hands of the Devil in his betrayal. He was fully conscious of his duty. He knew that all things were in his hands. Despite all this, he displayed great patience and manifested untiring love. He did not withdraw his love from them because of their weakness and the shameful failure which he knew would soon be made manifest. He not only loved them to the end of his earthly ministry, but loved them unto the "uttermost." "Loved to the uttermost" means that he bestowed upon them his love even to the extent of taking their place in death.

II. Christ Washing the Disciples' Feet (vv. 4-11).

This act was symbolic of his amazing love for his disciples. Jesus did not regard his hands too holy to do this menial service.

1. Steps in this service (vv. 4-6).

a. He rises from supper.

b. Laid aside his garments.

c. Took a towel and girded himself.

d. Poured water into a basin.

e. Washed his disciples' feet.

f. Wiped them with the towel wherewith he was girded.

These steps symbolize Christ's entire work of redemption. His rising from supper represents his rising from his place of enjoyment in the heavenly glory. His laying aside his garments symbolized his putting aside his vesture of majesty (Phil. 2:7, 8). His girding himself symbolized his taking the form of a servant (Phil. 2:7). The water in the basin—his cleansing blood. His washing of the disciples' feet—his actual cleansing of them through his Word (John 15:3; Eph. 5:26). His taking his garments again—his returning to his place and position of glory.

2. Peter's impetuosity and ignorance (vv. 6-9). When he realized what the Lord was doing, he refused to have his feet washed. When he realized the peril of refusal, he desired to be fully washed. He went from one extreme to another.

3. The significance of this service to those who participate in it (vv. 8-11).

a. It is a spiritual cleansing (v. 8). Fellowship with Jesus is only possible as we are continuously cleansed from our sins. The cleansing here is not the washing of regeneration, but that of sanctification. Even those who are regenerated need the continual cleansing of Christ's blood in order to have fellowship with him. He that is regenerated; that is, washed in the blood of Christ (symbolized by water baptism), does not need a repetition of the act, but he needs the cleansing of sanctification (symbolized by the washing of the feet).

b. A badge of brotherly affection (v. 14). This act showed his abandonment to the service of his disciples. This is a lesson that is much needed today. True love is tested by the service it renders.

c. A proof of humility (v. 15). This was a lesson much needed by the disciples, and much needed by us all today. They had just been disputing as to who should be the greatest in the kingdom. Thus their selfish ambition was expressing itself. On every hand we see expressions of pride, vanity, and even arrogance, in those who are professed followers of the lowly Jesus.

d. Equalization (v. 16). As the disciples were thus served by Jesus Christ, their vain ambitions were rebuked. To enter into this service in the Spirit of Christ is to encounter a leveling of humanity.

III. An Example for Us (vv. 14-16). Christ the Lord of all became the servant of all, and his disciples are under solemn obligation to follow him in their service to others.

This obligation rests upon his lordship (v. 14).

Migratory Waistlines

The waistline of the members of the "fair sex" has now returned to almost the normal level after having slipped down almost to the knees. These vagaries, however, like the rest of fashion's fancies, are no new thing, and in an old French book published in 1820, when George IV was king, we find this sentence: "The waist is a part of the body, whose length, breadth, shortness, or smallness is entirely regulated by fashions, which sometimes does not appear to allow of any."

STOP THAT COLD

DISTRESSING cold in chest or throat—that so often leads to something serious—generally responds to good, old Musterole with the first application. Should be more effective if used once every hour for five hours.

This famous blend of oil of mustard, camphor, menthol and other helpful ingredients brings relief naturally. Musterole gets action because it is a scientific "counter-irritant"—not just a salve—it penetrates and stimulates blood circulation, helps to draw out infection and pain. Used by millions for 20 years. Recommended by doctors and nurses.

To Mothers—Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

Picture Earth's Core as Holding Rich Treasure

A bonanza beyond belief exists from two to three thousand miles below the surface of the earth, according to two geophysicists of the Carnegie Institute of Washington. From all the known data these scientists infer that this planet is a solid ball of nickel and iron enclosed in three shells of rock.

Conjecture how the financial giants could cash in on that, were it accessible, if from more plinkies on the surface they pile up millions! But the scientists follow with the information that a shaft more than 2,000 miles deep would have to be sunk to reach the riches. It is doubtful if all the wealth in the world would pay for excavating a small fraction of the distance.

The core, according to the scientists,

Blame Put on Rats

A number of German explorers who have just returned to Capetown from the Nguni lake district in Africa report that Lake Nguni was formerly a deep lake 20 miles long and 10 miles wide. Today it is very shallow and almost dry, because, according to the natives, rats had stopped a number of rivers from flowing into it.

ists' theory, is surrounded by three shells. The first is of granite, about 35 miles; the second of basaltic rock, increasing in density for about 1,000 miles, and the third of heavy rock impregnated with iron, or nickel and iron for 1,000 to 1,500 miles.

Inky Bath of Mud

The Czechs have at Piatany a famous mud bath which is worth seeing, even if you do not take it. It is a pitch black mineral mud deposited in the water courses of the springs in great quantities. A thick layer is spread on a sheet, on which the patient lies, while the mud is hot. Attendants plaster it over the body till the patient looks like an armored knight—the black prince, if you like. Then, after being swathed in it for about ten minutes, the perspiration being wiped from the face at intervals, the patient is immersed in the mud bath, the mud at the bottom and the hot water being impregnated with sulphur.

Newboys, with folded papers tucked under their arms, are a familiar sight on the streets of Bogota. But the pedestrians, listening to their cries, never learn the contents of those publications without buying a copy. A municipal regulation forbids the boys to announce more than the name of the paper they are selling. It's pretty hard to tell here what the most of them say on the streets when selling papers.

SELECTING EGGS FOR HATCHING

(By J. H. Bodwell)

When hatching eggs are selected for one particular thing which is especially wanted, the poultryman is quite apt to defeat his purpose by overlooking other equally important qualifications. It is a common practice to select large eggs because the farmer wants good-sized eggs to sell. It is true that egg size is inherited to a great extent, but many other factors must be considered before eggs are selected simply on size.

Take the dairy cow, for example. Holstein milk is generally lower in butter fat than Jersey milk. In other words, generally the breed of cows which gives the most milk has the least butter fat in the milk. Similarly, the larger the egg, the fewer eggs a hen will lay.

Thus, if the poultryman selects only for large size, year in and year out, he may soon have a good-looking flock of birds that lay large eggs, but the annual egg production may be very small. In general, a bird which lays large eggs will only lay a few eggs a week. Birds lay larger eggs in spring and summer than in the early fall or winter, due to the degree of maturity. The size of the eggs, then, varies according to the hen's age.

Hatching eggs should not be selected on size alone, but combined with the characteristic of heavy production if at all possible.

ALL NIGHT LIGHTS FOR CHICKS

(By Prof. Paul G. Riley)

The use of all night lights in brooding baby chicks is becoming increasingly popular. It seems to help a great deal in solving some of the brooding problems, particularly on early chicks.

The light practically eliminates crowding, providing the temperature is about right, it gives the chicks an opportunity to drink more water, and to eat a slightly additional amount of feed, and eliminates the necessity of the chicks going through the long night with the amount of feed that they have been able to pack into their crop late in the evening, before dark comes.

The result of all night lights is that it makes brooding easier, chicks drink a little more water, and it has a tendency to increase the rate of growth somewhat.

A five or ten watt bulb is sufficient to light one ten by twelve,

The very earliest vegetables in the spring are much more welcome than even more tasty varieties which are longer in finding their way to the table. Among the extra early vegetables are rhubarb and asparagus. Of course, it takes several seasons for plants to establish themselves sufficiently to allow heavy cutting. However, one or even two year roots are not very expensive. They should be planted along the side of the garden so that there will be no interference with annual plowing or spading.

A very heavy application of stable manure should be plowed or spaded into the perennial vegetable bed before planting. Three to five tin cups full of commercial fertilizer to 100 square feet might also be worked into the bed as it is being prepared.

Horsedradish is another perennial vegetable that is very easily grown. Sage, thyme, and catnip were always found in the old time garden but are rarely found in the modern planting.

There is no reason why a row of 200 Premier strawberry plants should be omitted from this area of the garden. Twenty-five to fifty plants of Cumberland raspberries or Eldorado blackberries would bring a welcome variation into the fruit menu. The last two fruits are somewhat more difficult to care for but after the first year may be mulched so heavily with straw or leaves that no summer cultivation will be necessary.

(If you wish a copy of suggested plan for the home or farm garden, a trip or letter to County Agr. Agent's office will bring it.)

HORSE SENSE

Thoroughness of application of sprays is essential in control of any pests, whether on trees, in hen houses, hog houses, or anywhere else.

The loss in rotation of pastures in 1931 and the failure of clover as the result of the drought of 1930, has made a pasture shortage on many Indiana farms, and likely will cause more trouble until the farms are back to their old basis.

ten by fourteen, or even slightly larger brooder house. It is not the intention to keep the chicks active all night, but to give them an opportunity to see enough to make themselves comfortable, and to make it possible for them to get a drink and get located around the stove, if they wander away from the rest of the chicks.

Favorite Bible Passages

Thomas D. Schall
U. S. Senator from Minnesota.

Whom the Lord loveth He chasteneth.—Hebrews 12:6

Comment: In the first year of my blindness I often wished that He had not loved me quite so much, but through the chastisement has come to me understanding. With that understanding I realize the truth. I no longer pray "Take the cup from me," but accept the fight for life as it is presented to me. After twenty-one years of darkness I wouldn't trade the understanding that has come to me for all the eyes in the world.

I entered the forest of darkness untrained, undisciplined, grasping, selfish. I came out of that darkness when understanding became my sight, when I had learned to bear disappointment, when I had comprehended to do the thing that was to be done for love of the cause and not for self-aggrandizement. When I became interested unselfishly, and worked because the work was there to be done, without considering whether the result would help me or not—though in the doing of the thing that would not help me I was most helped—I began to understand what Christ meant, when His disciples, quarrelling among themselves as to who should be first, replied, "The first shall be last and the last shall be first. He that shall endure until the end shall be saved."

NEW TYPE OF BOMBING MACHINE WHICH HAS SUCCESSFULLY PASSED RIGID ARMY TESTS

An official army air corps photograph of the Douglas B-7 bomber plane, which has successfully passed tests made by officers of the flight test section. The plane is unique in that its wing is "dipped" in the center, giving it the appearance of a gigantic gull. It is powered by two 600 horsepower engines and carries a crew of three men.

THINGS NEW AND OLD

We all enjoy something new for our tables; here is one that will be new and most tasty; try it:

White Grape Pie.—Take one and one-half tablespoons of lemon juice, the same of quick-cooking tapioca, three and one-half cups of seedless grapes cut into halves, two teaspoons of vinegar, a dash of salt and one and one-fourth cups of sugar. Let the mixture stand fifteen minutes, then fill the pie and cover with pastry as usual. Bake until the filling is well cooked.

Bohemian Sandwiches.—Cut rye bread into thin slices and spread generously with creamed butter with finely chopped cress. Put together in pairs with thin slices of radish dusted with salt between them. These are especially good with an outdoor meal where the meat is cooked over an open fire.

Cheese Pudding.—Mix together three slightly beaten eggs, one and one-half cups of thin cream, one pound of snappy cheese grated, one and one-half cups of salt, one teaspoonful of mustard and a few grains of cayenne. Pour into a buttered baking dish lined with bread cut into strips of serving size and arranged with the edges touching. Bake until the mixture puffs like an omelet—about thirty minutes in a moderate oven. This makes a nice luncheon dish with a green salad, or a good hot supper dish.

Noodles en Casserole.—Stir a package of fine noodles into about six cups of boiling water. Add one and one-half cups of sliced and one-fourth cup of sliced stuffed olives and cook until the noodles are tender—about twenty minutes. Pour into a buttered casserole without draining; as there will be just enough broth for sauce remaining. Sprinkle with grated cheese and brown in a hot oven.

Delicious String Bean Salad.—Cook three-fourths of a pound of beans until tender after cutting into long thin slices. Mix with one cupful of finely chopped cucumber, two thinly sliced green onions and serve with well seasoned mayonnaise.

My Neighbor Says:

FORK is the best implement to use when making mayonnaise dressing. A beater is likely to cause the eggs and oil to separate, while the fork will thoroughly mix the ingredients.

Corks too large to fit into the desired bottle can be softened by soaking 15 minutes in boiling water and then pressed into the bottle.

To blanch nuts, cover with cold water and bring slowly to the boiling point for two minutes, drain thoroughly, rinse with cold water. Drain well and then rub or pinch the skins off. Dry over a slow heat or between towels before using.

A drop or two of almond with the required teaspoonful of vanilla gives more character to the taste of rather flat tasting puddings, cakes and desserts.

Gives Rules for People Who Have Weak Hearts

Buffalo, N. Y.—Dr. Frans M. Groedel, German heart specialist, gave 12 commandments to be followed by persons having or fearing heart trouble.

1. Avoid all disturbance of the heart and circulatory system.
2. Eat often, but never too much.
3. Avoid overuse of nicotine.
4. Use very little alcohol, and drink only weak coffee.
5. Take exercise by walking, riding, or golfing, but do so in moderation.
6. All exercise should be regarded as a remedy and not a sport.
7. Rest in the middle of every day.
8. Take excitement in moderate doses and be complete abstainer from extreme excitement.
9. Spread your vacations through the year.
10. Take one day a week of rest, and, if possible, get into the country.
11. Follow your physician's advice.

Pastel Suit Fate of Well Dressed Male

Cincinnati.—Suits in pastel shades are coming for the well-dressed young man, along with white summer suits. And he will use the tails coat often than the dinner jacket.

That is, if he heeds the edict of Raymond G. Twyford, fashion expert of the National Association of Merchant Tailors, in annual convention here.

Moreover, if sartorial perfection is desired one must have a Norfolk jacket with knickers for sports wear. And for entertaining in one's own home, the "host suit," a garment similar in cut to a dinner jacket, but made in conservative colors instead of black, will be used.

Strange Animal Puzzles People of Delta, Colo.

Delta, Colo.—Delta is trying to name the strange animal that ate its way through the walls of Paul Kinney's home and settled down as though it belonged there.

Experts said it was a catwampus, or ring tailed cat.

The creature had a head like a weasel, a body similar to that of a gray squirrel, and a tail, several inches longer than its body, ringed like that of a raccoon.

It had a very pointed nose, and sharp teeth. The fur was very soft.

Pedantry crams our heads with learned lumber, and takes out our brains to make room for it.—Coleridge.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK by WALTER TRUMBULL

It was Peter Rainier who told me about emeralds. Mr. Rainier happens to have been born in Africa, but his great-great-grandfather was a British admiral. It was for this navy man that Vancouver named Mt. Rainier, in the state of Washington, the glacier clad peak you see from Paradise Inn, a resting place which was aptly christened. George Palmer Putnam, Johnny Held, Freddy O'Brien, Wallace Irwin, Charles Hanson Towne and I were there several years ago, and I never shall forget it. Just at present, Peter Rainier is at the Explorers' club, having come up from Columbia, where the emerald mine he is working is located.

To get to the mine from New York is a simple matter. All you have to do is to take a boat through the Panama canal and then go down the Colombian coast to some such place as Buenaventura. Then you take a train to Bogota, the capital. This takes only a couple of days and nights and you are then practically at your destination.

A hilly horseback ride of two additional days will bring you to the emeralds.

The emeralds are situated in some rock on top of a 9,000-foot mountain, but there is a bit of digging to be done before you can get at them. It is necessary, in fact, to remove about 400 feet of the mountain top before you get to the rock, the next thing is to find the emerald, the largest of which may perhaps be as big as your thumb. To do this, you crack up and sift the rest of the mountain. Emeralds are found as crystals, and always in hexagonal prisms. Moreover, when they are found, each of the six faces is polished more perfectly than a jeweler can do it. They lie in veins in the solid rock and after one of these veins is opened you can dig the emeralds out with your thumb.

Diamonds are found in blue clay, and rubies and sapphires in gravel, but emeralds are more fastidiously guarded by nature. Next to the diamond, I believe they are the hardest of precious stones. The early Colombia natives used to barter emeralds, and the Spaniards later worked the mines. They did it by driving tunnels and shafts and it was by an Indian falling down one of these ancient workings that the mines were rediscovered.

A day's journey down the mountain slope from the mines, Mr. Rainier has a 5,000-acre ranch. Here he raises vegetables, horses and cattle. I asked him whether he ever had imported cattle from the North. He said he had not. One reason was that imported cattle might not like the altitude and another that only the native cattle could stay on the mountain slopes. He couldn't even find a horizontal place for his ranch house and had to build it on two levels.

We always are hearing persons say that to be a good bridge player one must have card sense. Ely Culbertson never played poker, or any card game, except bridge. He declares that card sense is not essential. In his opinion, what a player needs at bridge is a good system and a good head.

Some one told me the other day that Olga Petrova's real name was Muriel Harding and that she was British born. They admitted, however, that she had learned to speak broken English with a more charming accent than a real Russian.

Jenny Dolly of the famous Dolly sisters now runs a lingerie shop in Paris, and has an exquisitely furnished and beautiful home in that city.

HOW IT STARTED By JEAN NEWTON TO "BACKBITE"

TO ACCUSE a person of backbiting is not to accuse him of being a cannibal—that is, the accused does not literally put teeth into any person's back.

A backbiter is simply one who slanders or speaks ill of somebody in their absence. That there is so much backbiting is regrettable.

However, this is not a strictly modern practice. It seems to be part of human nature, as is evidenced by the fact that the earliest recorded use of the expression is found in the Bible, in Proverbs, 25:23.

In a nutshell Friendship is one of life's treasures that need not fluctuate with the market, or suffer from lack of demand.

The Children's Corner

Edited by DOROTHY EDMONDS

1. FANCY ENVELOPES. Many letters and holiday cards now come in beautiful envelopes. With these you can make pretty designs, scrapbooks and doll's dresses. On the plain side of the envelope draw or trace a bird, a star, or a flower and cut out the design. Paste this in a blank book. A scrapbook made of these bright designs would be nice to give to a friend, or several books could be sent to children in the hospitals. You can also draw the initials of your name in double lines and cut them out to decorate booklets or boxes. These fancy envelopes will also make dresses for your paper dolls.

2. A PAGE-A-DAY DIARY. Cut seven pieces of white or colored paper about five inches square or even larger. Every day find one pretty picture or a poem to paste on one-half of one page. Under this write the happiest event of the day. Make holes in the tops of these pages and run a ribbon through but leave plenty of room before you tie it in a bow, for you will add a page each day to the ribbon. When the seven pages are filled, cut out another seven and keep on making your diary in this way.

3. THE GAME OF HEADS. Cut figures of men, women, and children out of newspapers and magazines, choosing the largest ones. Then cut off their heads. Next find all kinds of heads in the magazines and papers, heads of babies, animals, brownies or grown people, and cut out as many heads as you have figures. Place your figures in a row on the table. Mix the heads all together and put them in a pile. Then shut your eyes and pick up one head. Place this on top of a figure. Continue in the same way until every figure has a different head. What funny people!

"BY SWITCHING TO TARGET MY HUSBAND SAVES 50 CENTS A WEEK."

We had to cut down expenses, so my husband did his share by switching to Target and rolling his own cigarettes. I felt kind of sorry for him at first, but I notice he's more cheerful than ever.

"He tells me that Target rolls up into cigarettes that look and taste like ready-mades. Target is the same mixture of foreign and domestic tobaccos that the ready-mades use. You get 40 special gummed papers free. No wonder my husband tells me he's glad he changed. He's getting more cigarette pleasure than ever, and we're saving about enough to pay for the family's bread and butter each month."

HUSBANDS, PLEASE NOTE!

You pay less than one-sixth the government tax on ready-mades when you roll your own from TARGET. Buy a pack of TARGET. Roll yourself fifteen or twenty smokes. If you don't say they are the best cigarettes you have ever smoked, return the half empty pack to your dealer's and you'll get your time back.

Orthography

Frederick spelled badly and received very poor grades. One day he returned with a paper well sprinkled with the usual crosses. His mother looked it over.

"Here is one word marked wrong that is right," she said.

"No, she knows," replied the lad hopelessly.

"You must show it to your teacher, anyway," said his mother.

Frederick did as he was told and returning to his mother, reported:

"She was right," he said, "she says that k-n-e-w does not spell canoe."

Scolds neighbor for using lifeless suds

I'm surprised at you—trying to get a clean wash with such flat suds! Just try Rinsol and see the difference. It gives the richest, soapy suds you ever saw! Clothes come so white, you'll be amazed. I never use any soap but Rinsol.

For tub washing, too Makers of 40 famous washers recommend Rinsol. Great for tub washing, too—suds out dirt—saves scrubbing and boiling—saves the clothes!

Cup for cup, Rinsol gives twice as much suds as lightweight, puff-up soaps. Letting suds, even in hardest water. Marvelous for dishwashing, and for all cleaning. Get the BIG package today.

Girl at the Top in Health Tests

Millions of boys and girls all over the world, thousands of them right here in the West, are being restored to health and strength by the purely vegetable tonic and laxative known as California Fig Syrup and endorsed by physicians for over 50 years.

Children need no urging to take it. They love its rich, fruity flavor. Nothing can compete with it as a gentle, but certain laxative, and it goes further than that. It gives tone and strength to the stomach and bowels so these organs continue to act normally, of their own accord. It stimulates the appetite, helps digestion.

A Kansas mother, Mrs. Dana Allie, 610 Monroe St., Topeka, says: "Bonnie B. is absolutely the picture of health, now, with her rosy cheeks, bright eyes and plump but graceful little body and she stands at the top in every health test."

Much of the credit for her perfect condition is due to California Fig Syrup. We have used it since babyhood to keep her bowels active during colds or any children's ailments and she has always had an easy time with them. She always responds to its gentle urging and is quickly back to normal."

Ask your druggist for California Fig Syrup and look for the word "California" on the carton so you'll always get the genuine.

Which Is It, Umpe?

She was addressing a group of eager wide-eyed children at the regular library story hour. "Today, boys and girls, I am going to tell you a real scary story about a vampire. You know what a vampire is, don't you?"

"Oh, sure," answered one sophisticated youngster scornfully. "You mean the one who decides in a baseball game."

"Ho, ho," laughed another in derision. "Listen to him. He's talking about an empire."

That's the name of the new horse at the National Museum. He's hailed as the missing link in the evolutionary chain of the modern horse. Many skeletal remains of this new and long-sought species of fossil steed have been discovered near Hagerman, Idaho, by a Smithsonian Institution field party. ## Bedridden with Rheumatism

Rubs on oil... gets up right away

There's nothing like good old St. Jacob's Oil for relieving the aches and pains of Rheumatism, Lumbago, Backache, Neuralgia or sore Muscles. You rub it on. Without burning or blistering it quickly draws out pain and inflammation. Relief comes before you can count for it. Get a small bottle from your druggist.

Check on Bathing

So many persons obeyed impulses to take dips in irrigation canals of southern Arizona, which run full of cool, sparkling water, that the sheriff of Pinal county posted notices that anyone bathing in such canals, which line highways, would be prosecuted unless garbed in a bathing suit.

For Stomachs TEMPORARILY Out-of-Order

Garfield Tea is a natural laxative. It is a good old-fashioned, tried and true remedy for all cases of temporary out-of-order stomachs. It stimulates sluggish liver and restores normal action. Recommended by many years of physicians. A good for children as it is for grown-ups. Get it at your druggist's.

DAIRY FACTS

POOR COW HAS NO FUTURE IN HERD

Cornell Economist Sees Era of Lower Prices.

"Dairy cow prices may be low, but they will be lower. The average price of a dairy cow in New York state has dropped from $135 in September two years ago to 74 in September of last year. In the same time the general price level has dropped from 51 per cent above pre-war prices to only 2 per cent above. But cow prices in New York state are now 29 per cent above pre-war, and cow prices in the United States are 5 per cent below pre-war. High prices there and low prices elsewhere are moving cows into New York and depressing the price still further."

This is the statement of the present situation, by Prof. M. C. Bond, Cornell economist, who goes further and predicts that dairymen who hold cull cows for higher prices may be disappointed, and that those who are buying cows now should be prepared to inventory them at a lower price next spring. This is because cow prices are now in the downward period of the cow cycle, he says. The last peak of prices was in 1920 and ordinarily prices decline from six to eight years after the high price peak is reached. Judging from the past, improvement is not due until about 1930 or 1937.

In other downward periods of the cow cycle, the price of cull cows and canners declined faster than the price of good grade cows and pure breeds. The present cycle, or period, is no exception. Cull cows become almost worthless at the low point of the cycle. This is one of the chief reasons for advocating vigorous and prompt culling, he explains.

Reasons Advanced as to Time to Raise Calves

Many dairymen believe that it costs too much to raise calves when both milk and feed are high in price, so they do not bother with this end of the business, buying new cows to take the places of the old ones. When milk and feed are low, every penny is needed, so rearing calves is looked on as a needless expense.

An Ohio expert says the dairy business has cycles as do other industries. The best time to raise calves, he believes, is when both milk and feed are cheap. By the time the heifers are in milk, conditions have changed, milk is higher and so are milk cows and there is nearly always a shortage in good heifers. He admits that it takes cows to lay plans two or three years ahead, but he believes the man who does it gets his reward. Always an active worker in dairy organizations, he believes that only through co-operation can dairymen hope for better conditions for themselves.

Radio in Dairy Barn

Cows are not among the admirers of the Amos and Andy skits, according to Dr. W. L. Williamson, superintendent of the extensive ranch and live stock holdings of Herbert Fleishacker of San Francisco. Mr. Williamson was in Boise recently to buy some Guernsey stock of good grade, a writer in the Idaho Farmer reports. He stated that the radio was run day and night in their dairy barns, adding:

"We run it both for the cows, to keep them contented, and for the milkers. We have a herd of 900 Guernseys and milking is going on the entire 24 hours. Noise disturbs the cows but with rhythmic music they do not notice if anyone stumbles and spills a milk pail; then, the life of a milker is none too cheerful—milking cows twice a day 865 days of the year—and they, too, enjoy the radio. Jazz? Well, the milkers like some jazz, but I never noticed whether it disturbed the cows or not. Amos and Andy does a little."

DAIRY HINTS

Careful feeding of dairy cows is especially important when milk prices are low. The ration should be carefully balanced and fed strictly in accordance with the amount of milk produced.

Tests in the United States government laboratories show that cows do not give the same kind of milk from all quarters of the udder. Each quarter works independently of the others and the milk from each may differ greatly from the others in the quantity, butterfat percentage, bacterial content and other characteristics.

Oats are one of the best grains for dairy cattle. This grain is medium high in carbohydrates, medium to low in protein, very palatable and is slightly laxative.

By producing, in 365 days, 25,547 pounds of milk (11,900 quarts) and 1,024.5 pounds of butterfat, Cornflower Maudeline Pontiac, a mature Holstein cow owned by R. V. Rasmussen, Lake county, Illinois, produced enough to supply all the dairy needs of 260 persons for an entire year.

GENOA, Old and New

Street Laundry in Genoa.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU service.)

A MOUNTAIN recently was blown into bits near Genoa to make way for a seaside highway between the city and Sampierdarena, one of its suburbs. Before excited Genoese who crowded every vantage point, tons of dynamite, which had been poured into 700 foot drilled holes, leveled the rocky barrier, thrusting a large part of it into the Genoa harbor.

Genoa may be considered the Alma Mater of the Americas, the nurtured Christopher Columbus in his boyhood years, when he dreamed the dreams that were to shape his life; communicated to him a love of the sea that had made him great; imbued him with a dominating thirst for the adventure that was hatched at every strange galley and carved that crowded her spirit for his dreams until that October day in 1492 when, fulfilling them, he wrung a hemisphere from oblivion to add it to the map of the world.

The Genoa of today is a great modern city, if you center your attention on its industries, on its steel ships, on the dwellings of its upper tiers, on the business of the Via Venti Settembre (20th of September street), and the crowds of prosperous-looking, well dressed people who throng that thoroughfare morning and evening to holiday promenades.

But Genoa is not only a modern city. The links that tie the present to the times of Columbus, and to days long before his, still hold strongly. One may step on the very stones on which young Christopher walked; the walls that rose beside the narrow ways that his restless young feet trod still stand, block after block of them; and only a few steps from the present business heart of the city, where beautiful modern buildings rise about the Piazza De Ferrari and the Via Venti Settembre starts upon its broad, straight way, is the most important link of all, the House of Columbus.

This dwelling of Domenico Colombo, father of the future admiral, and of Susanna, his mother, was the place in which Christopher spent his early boyhood. Tourists must view this historic old house from the outside, unless they have a special permit.

Records All in Palace.

Official records of the family of Columbus are kept in municipal offices. These offices are in one of the beautiful old palaces of the Genoese nobles. Whatever activity you search for in Genoa, it seems, you find in a palace. The city offices are in one, the port officials transact their business in another, the prefect looks after matters of state in a third; and others are museums, art galleries, schools, and telegraph offices. You begin to wonder, as you make your way from palace to palace, whether the butchers and bakers and candlestick makers of Genoa conduct their businesses in these sumptuous structures, and to doubt that in Genoa's palmy days there were any commoners at all to live in mere houses.

In the municipal palace Genoa keeps mementos of her illustrious sons, whether by birth or forced adoption. There are portraits of the great statesman, Maestri; the incomparable explorer, Marco Polo and Columbus; and sundry heroes of the Crusades. In a glass case rest the violin and bow of the world's master violinist, Paganini.

At an end of the council chamber, carved from one piece of marble, stands a tall pedestal surmounted by a bust of Columbus. A recess has been cut into the pedestal and fitted with an ornamental bronze door. This a custodian unlocks and takes from their marble resting place Genoa's most precious documents; three letters written by the hand of Christopher Columbus and signed with his curious signature, and a parchment book containing copies of the documents through which various privileges and titles were conferred upon him by Ferdinand and Isabella.

All the letters were written from Seville to Genoa, two in 1502, as the great navigator was preparing for his fourth and last voyage, and one in 1504, after his return from the New world. Two are to Nicolo Oderigo, an important citizen of Genoa, who served as ambassador from the republic to the Spanish court. That of March 21, 1502, tells of sending his book of privileges for safe keeping.

Treasures Carefully Guarded Now.

The letters are framed now and protected by glass. This was not always so, as the missing lower corner of one of the documents shows. This fragment, the custodian tells you, was torn off years ago by a tourist who had been courteously permitted to examine the letters—one of that invincible breed of vandals, the soulless souvenir hunter, to whom ethics apparently are beside the point.

As soon as a privileged visitor has examined the treasures, the watchful curator takes his treasures and locks them again in their queer place of safe keeping. The Columbus house is some distance away but every step adds interest to the traveler's stay in the city. The narrow, winding streets teem with an intimate mixture of wheeled traffic and pedestrians. Some of these ways have narrow sidewalks, from which the pedestrians spill over at intervals. Others have no curbs, and one must needs compete for space with taxis, open "cabs," and laden carts. Still other ways are mere crevasses between old five and six storied tenement houses, far too narrow for wheeled vehicles.

Suddenly you leave these congested streets and come out into the Piazza De Ferrari, the largest of the open spaces within Genoa's business sections. One side of the square is lined with the buildings of Old Genoa, the walls of palaces for the most part; but on the opposite side a newer Genoa stands forth—the Teatro Carlo Felice, the Academy of Belle Arts, the new Bourse, the post office. These fine structures are relatively new and form the portal to the Via Venti Settembre.

When this era of new construction was under way many ancient buildings were demolished. Part of the ground so obtained was used as sites for the new structures and part was left vacant and added to the piazza. One of the blocks of closely packed buildings marked for destruction contained the house of Columbus. The identity of this edifice had long been lost, but became known in 1880, after which the property was purchased by the municipality and set aside as a monument.

In the House of Columbus.

The house originally had five stories, but was only one room in width. It was hemmed in between taller buildings and was in part supported by groups of stone pillars. When the house of Columbus could not be left unsupported, so the upper three stories were removed. The two lower stories, roofed over, now stand isolated, an approximate cube of rough masonry—a sort of Genoese Kanba and, like that sacred Mecca shrine, a center of world interest if not of pilgrimage.

Inside the large wooden door the traveler finds himself in a gloomy, unlighted, boxlike room, wholly bare. It is some minutes before one's eye can make out the details of the interior. The floor is of stone, and the brick walls have a queer, jagged surface. Overhead the beams and thick boards have the same rough, nicked appearance. Your guide explains that for a long time before it had been identified the house had been used as a tenement by poor families of the city, and that when it came into possession of the municipality its walls and ceilings were encrusted with the grime of centuries. Scrubbing would do no good; so stone cutters were put to work with chisels and mallets to cut away the incrustations of half a millennium and to bring to light a surface at once clean and nearer to that of the Columbus era.

Toward the rear of the portion of the building still standing is a narrow, winding stair of wood. The front room on the second floor has two windows in the front wall, is more airy and is better lighted than that below and was probably one of the chief apartments of the Columbus family. Its walls, too, have been chipped to form a fresh surface, and the floor, reasonably clean, has probably been scraped. Into one of the wide walls has been set a marble slab, carved into a charming base-relief of the Santa Maria, the ship which bore Columbus on his great adventure. In a corner stands a little statue of Columbus, the boy. These are the only mementos of the great man who as a child lived here; for the rest the house is bare.

WORK IN THE HOME CALLS FOR "TRAVEL"

A mail carrier presents official figures showing that in the course of his forty-two-year career he walked a distance equal to nine journeys round the earth. But the housewife, the waitress, the bus conductor, the doctor and many another person who does not seem to move far from one spot takes, in reality, an astonishing amount of exercise. Pedometer records have shown that a woman with a husband and two children, walked about fifty miles in the course of a week. In another case tested by pedometer, a girl dancer at a theater, who has plenty to do on the stage, found that her work entailed fewer steps than that of a housewife who had no children to look after. Schoolboys and girls have been found to walk more than seventy miles a week, in the course of their restless flittings hither and thither. A London bus conductor has a very strenuous day's physical labor. In addition to walking about thirty miles in the course of his week's work, he has been found to climb every day the equivalent of nearly two-thirds of the height of Mount Snowdon. A golf professional discovered that he had walked a little over 110 miles in the course of giving 54 ordinary lessons to beginners on the links.—London Mail.

Fifty and Fit

A MAN is as old—or as young—as his organs.

At fifty, you can be in your prime.

Why go along with "fairly good health" when you might be enjoying vigor you haven't felt for years?

There's a simple little thing anyone can do to keep the vital organs stimulated, and feel fit all the time. People don't realize how sluggish they've grown until they've tried it. The stimulant that will stir your system to new life is Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. It will make a most amazing difference in many ways.

This famous doctor's prescription is a delicious syrup made with fresh herbs, active senna, and pure pepsin. It starts its good work with the first spoonful.

Strange but True

True—Do you kiss all the boys you go out with, dearie?

Sue—No, some of them just haven't any ingenuity whatever.

That's all you need to drive away the dullness and headache of a bilious spell, and the system of that slow poison that saps your strength. It's better than a tonic for tired bowels, and unlike habit-forming laxatives you can take it freely or give it to any child. And it isn't expensive.

Get some syrup pepsin today, and take a little tonight. Don't wait until you're sick to give your system this wonderful help. You can avoid those spells of biliousness or constipation. A spoonful every now and then is better than constant worry about the condition of your bowels, or fear of auto-intoxication as you grow older. Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepsin protects the system. All druggists keep this preparation.

News Events of Interest to the Public
In General

There have been many absences during the past week due to sickness. Miss Reed has been absent several days because of sickness. Walter Coburn has been substituting for Miss Reed during her absence.

The Junior High School basketball team went to the semi-finals in the tournament held at Butler last Saturday. Their first opponent was Waterloo. The score was 26 to 7 in favor of Spencerville. The second game was with North Keyser. The score was 43 to 25 in favor of North Keyser. Our coach felt confident that our boys were equal to those from North Keyser so he challenged the coach of that team. The challenge was accepted and in a few weeks there will be a game at Spencerville between North Keyser and Spencerville.

There was no music Monday and Tuesday. The classes will be held on Thursday and Friday instead.

HONEY

(By Eunice Shilling)

This syrup like liquid, of spicy sweetness and pleasing taste and flavor, is one of Mother Nature's most welcome contributions to the food of man. To provide him with this agreeable delicacy she placed nectar within the flowers and she taught the honey bee how to convert it into a delectable and nutritious food.

The flavor and color of honey vary according to the flower from which the nectar is obtained, that from white clover being one of the most agreeable of the light colored varieties. An excellent dark colored honey is made from the nectar of the buckwheat. It is said that the nectar from 62,000 clover blossoms is required to produce one pound of honey, and that 3,700,000 visits of bees are required to gather it into the hive. The production of honey for the market and for domestic use has become an industry of great importance. In amount of honey produced the United States leads the world, with an annual output of about 62,000,000 pounds, valued at over $14,000,000.

Because of its high percentage of carbohydrates (mainly grape sugar and other fruit sugars), honey is quite nutritious, but only a small quantity should be eaten at a time, some authorities say not often than three or four meals a week. In addition to its use as a food, it is often found in cough preparations, and it is also valued for its mildly laxative properties. In Oriental Countries honey is used extensively in making cakes and sweet meats and in preserving fruit.

The fuel value in 1475 calories per pound or fifty calories in one tablespoon. It is equal to the best round steak as a heat producer.

Honey possesses the advantage over cane sugar in that it requires no digestion. In its natural state it is already to be absorbed by the tissues of the body.

As the ancients possessed no other form of sugar, honey was prized very highly by them. To the Hebrews it was the symbol of abundance; Jehovah, in Exodus 8:17, gives the promise of Moses that children of Israel shall be led from Egypt into a "land flowing with milk and honey." Many allusions to it are found in Greek and Roman writings.

When one buys a pound section of honey and takes it home to spread on the breakfast waffles, one naturally supposes, crushing the comb beneath the knife, that these waxen cells were made to hold that particular pound of honey, but this is a wrong idea. Honeycomb is made to last for years. It is handed down from generation to generation of bees for the storing of the yearly crop. For a comb to be thus used for twenty years is nothing unusual and instances have been reported which indicate that the same set of combs, periodically cleaned and repaired by the bees, has done service for forty years.

Honey has been the sweet of the ages. For centuries it satisfied the sugar-hunger of the world. By the use of modern hives the quality and flavor of honey have been greatly improved and the product purified. But the amazing life cycle of the bee has remained the same since the beginning of time. These tiny, industrious insects might well be called the masters of mass production, for their work has always been organized upon factory methods. Honey bees in their hives practiced modern industrial methods long before man set up his great factories.

BIG COMEDY COMES TO SHRINE

Bernard Shaw has jazzed his philosophy in his latest play, "The Apple Cart" which will appear at the Shrine Theatre, Fort Wayne, Indiana, Thursday, March 3, 1932. Weaving his socialistic theories in a comedy to the accompaniment of verbal saxophones he has produced a play that is not only highly amusing but one that gives you much to think about.

He hides the real intent of writing the play, that of predicting what England's political future may be, in situations that are almost farcical in nature but full of epigrams and the usual witty Shavian dialogue. It is a play which will appeal to the intellectuals but it is also a play which has an appeal to everyone who wants to be amused.

King Magnus, played by Boyd Irwin, is the clever politician who is endeavoring to maintain a certain amount of equilibrium in a kingdom where he is harassed by ministers, both men and women, all opposing him politically and trying to deprive him of his power. How he outwits them in the end, provides great audience entertainment.

One of the most daring things in the play is the interlude between the King and his mistress, Orinthis. She wants the king, who is rather henpecked, to divorce his wife and marry her. But the king, whose Queen Jemima bores him at times with her bromidic conversation, realizes that she is rather essential to him, but nevertheless admires Orinthis for her cheek.

Prices: Main floor, $2.00 and $1.50; balcony, $1.00, 75 cents and 50 cents. Mail orders received now.

FILE THAT MORTGAGE EXEMPTION NOW

As in past years, The News is prepared to file that mortgage exemption now, beginning March 1 and continuing until May 2.

The law provides that an owner of real estate having a mortgage on his property can by filing a certified statement with the county auditor obtain a credit not to exceed one-half the assessed valuation, or more than $1,000 if the indebtedness existed prior to March 1 of the present year.

Hundreds of DeKalb county real estate owners take advantage of this law and in most cases the exemption is the maximum allowed.

ed. The description of the property, the name of the holder of the mortgage and its amount must be set out in the blank and the instrument must be sworn to before a notary public.

The law also provides that any soldier or sailor who served three months or more in the army or navy of the United States during the Civil or Mexican War, and who shall have reached the age of seventy years or more, may have $1,000 deducted from his taxable property where the total assessed value of his taxables does not exceed $5,000 as shown by the tax duplicates for that year, and the balance constitutes the basis of taxation.

The widow of any soldier or sailor who shall have reached the age of sixty years or more is entitled to a like exemption. Soldiers and sailors of other wars and their widows have the same rights, but must have like qualifications as to age, etc.

As a matter of thrift, this should be taken care of at once and in so doing, bring your tax receipt so as to get a description of the property under mortgage.

Chas. Koch was telling one day about his radio, when he said:

"I've got a railroad radio."
"A railroad radio?" questioned the listener.
"Yeh, it whistles at every station."

FIRST CANDIDATES TO FILE FOR OFFICE

The first declaration of candidacy filed with County Clerk Glenn Potter Friday, the opening day, was by Arthur Grube, of Keyser township, for the democratic nomination for county commissioner from the southwest district. Mr. Grube is now serving his first term in that office.

Other candidates who filed during the forenoon are:

Robert B. Emerson, of Auburn, for the democratic nomination for county clerk.

Cary Swank, of Ashley, for the democratic nomination for county coroner.

Philip Holman, of Auburn, for the democratic nomination for county surveyor.

Otto Ginter, of Spencer township, for the democratic nomination for county clerk.

John P. Hoff, of Auburn, the present sheriff, for renomination on the democratic ticket.

Carl Walter, of Auburn, now deputy county clerk, for the democratic nomination for clerk.

Merritt M. Maxwell, of Auburn, the present county treasurer, for renomination on the democratic ticket.

The first republican to file was Wm. E. Bower, of Auburn, who is seeking the republican nomination for county clerk.

Richard W. Sharpless, Auburn, as democratic candidate for renomination for prosecuting attorney.

Leonard A. Wagoner, Butler, democratic candidate for clerk.

Carl J. Swank, Ashley, democratic candidate for coroner.

The first congressional candidate to file in the office of County Clerk Glenn Potter in anticipation of the primary in May is Thomas P. Riddle, of Clear Lake, a democrat. Others who have filed include: Vern L. Sparks, of Smithfield township, for the republican nomination for state senator from DeKalb, Steuben and LaGrange counties. John R. Clark, of Auburn, for renomination for coroner on the republican ticket. Cleve H. Grube, of Stafford township, for county commissioner from the southeast district on the democratic ticket.

IS NOW IN HAWAII

Edward P. Shoemaker, a former Spencerville boy, writes The News from Hawaiian Islands, and enclosed $4.50 for his St. Joe News. When he left Fort Eustis, Va., some weeks ago, he ordered The News stopped until we heard further from him, and here it is.

Edward is a member of Battery E, 64th, C. A. C. Fort Shafter, Hawaii, and he would be pleased to hear from any of his acquaintances. He says, "Hawaii is a wonderful fairyland for colors and climate, fruits, vegetables and flowers of all colors the year around. I sure had a wonderful trip, from New York City thru the Panama Canal, up to San Francisco, and then to Hawaii."

Let us hear from you again Edward when you have a chance to write.

WHEREABOUTS OF BABY LINDBERGH NOT REVEALED.

One Week Has Passed Since His Disappearance—Family Unduly Criticized For Mode of Restoring Child.

A week has elapsed since the kidnapping of the Lindbergh baby.

As yet, nothing definite has been done to restore this baby to its heartbroken parents, that is, nothing that produced results.

Perhaps no kidnapping since that of little Charlie Ross, by Pat

Crowe, which is within the memory of our older readers, has aroused such nation wide interest.

as has this one of the son of Charles Lindbergh.

No doubt this is to be accounted for, not alone for the spectacular stunt performed by the child's father, in crossing alone the Atlantic in an airplane, but for the quiet and unspoiled demeanor of the man after his accomplishment.

This is the quality that has endeared Lindbergh in the hearts of the American people. And because of this, we think lies the secret of the sympathy; not that it would be withheld in other cases, but, because Americans like a person whose success does not go to their head.

As was to be expected this unsettled age, the publicity given this affair, has called forth some criticism for instance, some have criticized the father for negotiating with bandits, for the restoration of the child, and one critic reaches the heights of animosity, when he suggests that our prohibition laws are responsible for kidnapping cases, though he does not account for those which happened before the, (to quote Ras-cob,) "Damnable affliction of prohibition."

Before one makes haste to advise as to which is the best course to pursue, it would perhaps be well to think of this: "put your self in his place." Try to visualize yourself as the father or mother of a stolen child, what would you do?

America has failed, if our constituted authorities fail so miserably in handling the criminal element, why censure a man for looking elsewhere for aid? It is a sad commentary on our age, when people joke about those to whom we look for protection against the devices of the wicked.

ST. JOE LADY
DIES AT EASTHAVEN

Margaret, wife of the late Harlow Ulm, of St. Joe, died at the Easthaven hospital at Richmond, Ind., Monday evening, where she had been confined for a few years.

John Ulm, guardian, was notified of her demise, and E. R. Kinsey removed the body to St. Joe Tuesday noon.

The body will lie in state at the Kinsey Funeral Home until the funeral Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

NEWVILLE HOME BURNS TUESDAY MORNING

Belle Crum, of Newville, is without a home, due to fire destroying it Tuesday morning at about 6:30 o'clock.

The Butler fire department was called and could only protect nearby homes from burning.

Part of the furniture was removed, but $150 worth of canaries were burned, because help could not be secured soon enough.

SISTER DIES AT TOLEDO

Mrs. J. P. Buckingham and J. E. Foltz received word Wednesday morning from Toledo, Ohio, stating that their sister, Mrs. Mary Hiltner had passed away. Mr. and Mrs. Foltz were just ready to leave for Toledo to call on Mrs. Hiltner, who had been taken to the hospital when word came of her death. The body will be removed to Continental, Ohio, and the relatives here left for that place.

The Ladies Aid of the Lutheran Church will meet with Mrs. John Engle in an all day meeting, at Auburn.

P. T. A. WORKERS TO MEET AT WATERLOO

The Twelfth District of the Indiana Congress of Parents and Teachers will hold an all day Conference on Parent Teacher work at the High School Auditorium, Waterloo, Tuesday, March 15th.

The morning session, devoted principally to reports of work will begin at 9:30. Luncheon will be served at 12:00 o'clock. During the afternoon session, Mrs. W. J. Hockett, State President will deliver an address on "Our Program of Work." The Rev. Hubert F. Craven, of Auburn will speak on "The Spiritual Development of the Child." Music will be furnished by the Waterloo Glee Club, by Mrs. Jeane Curie, and community singing led by Mrs. Jack Brown, of Auburn.

The number of Parent-Teacher members in Indiana is increasing rapidly and educators over the State are realizing more and more the benefit to be derived from the co-operation of the parents with school officials.

Mrs. C. H. Seaman, 1217 Lake Avenue, Fort Wayne is chairman of the District and anyone interested in Parent Teacher work may write to Mrs. Seaman for information. Other District officers are Mrs. E. B. Noble, Fort Wayne, secretary and Mrs. C. O. Krise, Auburn, treasurer.

OBITUARY

Louisa Elighinger Staman, daughter of George and Elizabeth Elighinger was born in Ashland County, Ohio, near Haysville, April 23, 1848. Departed this life March 4, 1932, at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Pearl King, Sturgis, Michigan. At the age of 83 years, 10 months and 10 days.

Fifty-seven years ago she with her husband and family moved to DeKalb County and located about three miles south of Coarbutown. After one year they moved to this farm, where they lived continuously, with the exception of a short time in near-by towns.

At the age of 14 she united with the Lutheran Church at Mifflin, Ohio. After moving here she united with the Lutheran Church at St. Joe, Ind., of which she was a faithful member and active in all affairs of the church for 70 years.

On March 8, 1866, she was united in marriage to Mr. William Staman. To this union were born two daughters and three sons.

On March 8, 1931 they celebrated their 65th wedding anniversary.

Just ten months ago May 5, 1931, her husband preceded her in death. One son, Byron, died at the age of five years. Also four sisters and one brother preceded her in death.

She leaves to mourn her departure two daughters, Mrs. Pearl King, of Sturgis, Mich., and Mrs. Effie Newman, of Coldwater, Mich. Two sons, Mr. Ashton Staman, of Auburn and William J. Staman, of St. Joe, Ind. Three sisters, Matilda Cowen, invalid, of Sturgis, Mich.; Eva Dennis, Toledo, Ohio, and Abie Reed, of Columbus, Ohio. Two brothers, John Elighinger, Hayesville, Ohio, and George Elighinger, Decatur, Illinois. Three grandchildren, one great grandchild and a host of relatives and friends.

Funeral services were held from the former home of Mr. Staman near St. Joe where she had resided for 55 years, Monday afternoon at 2 o'clock with burial at St. Joe, in charge of E. R. Kinsey, Rev. A. K. Mumma, of Harlan, a former pastor, officiating.

The Three Hortons

By FANNIE HURST

(© by McClure Newspaper Syndicate.)
(WNU Service)

NIMBLE-footed, nimble-witted, were the Three Hortons, and their long bookings on wide vaudeville circuits testified to it. The Three Hortons were a cheering part of any bill and almost invariably second only in importance to a headliner like Friganza, Brice or San Francisco.

There were Beatty Horton, whose patter was as nimble as his soft-shoe dancing, Alicia Horton, who could outpattern but not outdance her spouse, and, from the age of seven on, Winstead Horton, who could fling himself in a bridge from maternal to paternal shoulders, and sing in a choir soprano that had captivated his audiences from the days he had toddled on stage with lifted hands balancing unsure feet.

All that was changed now. Winstead was grown, his father Beatty had developed a gouty tendency and had been obliged to cut out the soft-shoe work, and Alicia, while she still made up to something of the old dashing blondness and was adorably cute in her slip line of patter, was nevertheless subject to the relentless eye of her audience to the extent that they simply did not want the "young stuff" from her any longer. Alicia, in rather severe togs and a slight comedy make-up, was getting around that, these days, by doing the young matron sort of thing, and to a point making her audience like it. But the fact of the matter was that by the time he was eighteen, and his parents were in their forties, Winstead, single-handed, was carrying the act.

And carrying it brilliantly. A flying contortionist, voice for comic, character and solo singing, a baffling ventriloquist and a soft-shoe dancer who seldom failed to get his six recalls, the Three Horton act practically rested on his slim young shoulders. Not that anything of the kind was ever admitted in the confines of the Horton family, however, actually Beatty or Alicia might long since have realized it to themselves. Regularly, the Three Hortons held confab for the refurbishing of their act; periodically rehearsals were called, changes inserted, songs revamped and costumes freshened for each and every one of the three of them, with emphasis on the requirements of each. Beatty's audiences wanted his sure-fire bombardment of patter; Alicia's wanted her blond and graceful; Winstead's wanted him the flying, dancing, comic, vocal young devil.

The Three Hortons. Up to the bitter end, until Beatty's patter began to crack in his throat, and Alicia's ankles to twist and turn as she danced, there was no out-and-out admission on the part of the older Hortons that they were finished.

The situation racked Winstead and tore at the very vitals of him. They were such a gallant pair in his eyes; the dudish, rakish, old Beatty who would limp to the wings from his dressing room, with his face made up into a grin and the darts of pain through his ankles like fire; the praiseworthy dear-beyond-the-telling, Alicia, whose role in life was to pamper everyone except herself, from her husband and son down to the most obscure performer on the bill. To see them slowly disintegrate, to see a merciless public grow cold to them, to behold the hurt in the eyes of his father and the bewilderment on the face of Alicia was pathos beyond the telling.

Not but what they gloried in the rising success of their son, and stood back with their faces perspiring and their hearts hurting from exertion and something else, for him to take the honors for the act, but there came the time when there was simply no easing the fact, for the two of them, that they were finished. Managers were clamoring for Winstead, and for years had been tolerating the presence of the older pair for the simple reason that he would not look without them.

But the time had come when it was apparent even to Winstead himself that there was imposition in any longer asking for bookings for the older pair. Beatty was winded almost before he reached stage, Alicia, poor dear, no longer had the stamina.

"We're finished, Beatty," Alicia announced to her husband one evening, as they sat around trying wholeheartedly to discuss plans for a next season's act. "What's the use beating around the bush? They don't want us. We're dead weight around Winstead's neck. Let's face the music."

It was with a sense of what seemed positive relief that Beatty capitulated. Actually, his old face seemed for the first time to allow itself to fall into the luxury of wrinkles.

"I guess you're right, Alicia. We're done."

There was not any money scare. Winstead, of course would see to that, and besides the Hortons, Beatty and Alicia, simple-living, simple-minded folk, had put by their little penny.

It was fear of Winstead that lay in their hearts. This boy, never out of his parents' tracks, suddenly alone on the road! Fear of Winstead had squatted on their old chests, both of them, ever since the shadow of this day of their retirement had begun to cast itself across the circuit. He was such a child, Winstead was. A helpless, confiding genius-like fellow. No good at money, for instance. Had to have it handed to him every morning. So much for taxicab. So much for lunches and little luxuries. So much for tips. No good at watching himself against colds, to which he was subject. It took all his mother could do to keep after him effectively with muffers, rubbers and precaution about drafts. No good at eating well. His father was forever giving him the second helpings of food without his even knowing it. Stacking his plate when his attention was diverted and then insisting that he eat.

"But I have eaten, father. Didn't you slip some more potatoes on my plate?"

"Nonsense. Eat, I say!"

Imagine a boy like that, a helpless, off-in-the-clouds fellow who had never had to think much for himself about the creature phases of life, off suddenly by himself on a circuit. It hurt the heart of Alicia so that she cried most of her nights. It threw such a dread into Beatty that his efforts to pretend to Alicia that all was well were pathetic to her almost beyond endurance.

Well, it had to be faced and, the sooner the better. The Hortons purchased for themselves the inevitable chicken farm in New Jersey, that haven of all good retired vaudevillians, and Winstead, bewildered and a little frightened with his released, began rehearsing a new act with a young girl with the stage name of "Yvette," whose singing and dancing had attracted the admiration of the Three Hortons.

It was a whirlwind turn of fast, amusing young-blood talk, really exquisite and highly diverting soft-shoe and toe-dancing, and some pretty dust-slugging that marked them for almost instantaneous success.

After a tryout in Newark, Winstead and Yvette were booked over a forty-week cycle and the pair of the older Hortons settled down to what gallant resignation they could muster.

And mustered they did, except it actually did seem that with the letting down of the strain and excitement of their life-time of years on the circuit, Beatty and Alicia were destined to fall apart like the proverbial one-hoss shay. Bad health set in for both almost the month after retirement. An old pair were nearing the final turn in their road.

He was quiet and peaceful and even beautiful in a way. Sweet, come right down to it, growing old out of a youth that had been so long and tumultuous and vigorous. It was Winstead that brought dread to the heart—Winstead, who had been so babbled.

His first visit home after the forty weeks brought peace to the heart on that score. He and Yvette had come back to the farm to be married. She is a tumultuous little thing. Dances like a whirl and can fling herself in a horizontal bridge from the neck of Winstead and start whirling. She is young, vivacious, beautiful and a whirlwind for making Winstead toe the mark. Rubbers! Let him try to venture out on a damp day without them. Appetite! Let him try to skip that glass of fresh cream with his lunch. Money! Yvette holds the purse strings and does out to him as if he were a child.

There is nothing left for Alicia and Beatty to dread about the twilight.

Dogs With Titles

The amazing history of Pekinesees has been told by Mrs. A. C. Dixie who spent a long time in China. A thousand years ago these small bundles of trouble were worshipped as symbols of Buddha, and invested with the highest titles an emperor could devise. They were created princes and dukes. They were granted gigantic revenues. They were honored with literary degrees. To steal one was to run a certain risk of enjoying that death known as the "Death by ten thousand slices." Today the Pekie is guarded with something of the same stringency, but in Tibet and not in his native birthplace. China last her hold on him when the Summer palace in Peking was sacked in 1900, and an English general brought a "sleeve dog" home in his hat as a gift to Queen Victoria.

Britain's Red Tape

The sleepy little village of Upper Tean, between Ulster and Stoke-on-Trent, is where the government obtains its red tape. Officialdom ties itself up with tape from Upper Tean. It also uses the same tape to tie up the parcels of restrictions which go to make Britain what it is. Old women with kindly faces turn out tape by the mile. It falls in cascades from the looms and, on the floor, great piles of red tape may be seen. There is enough tape to trip up the nation when handled with the cunning dexterity of Whitehall.—Montreal Herald.

Dying Request Denied

Though England has produced great painters, oddly enough the only one commemorated in Westminster abbey is Sir Godfrey Kneller, portrait artist from the time of Charles II to George I. Still queerer, Kneller's dying words were: "By G—d, I will not be buried in Westminster." To make absolutely certain he designed his own monument and paid $15,000 for the stone and work and chose a spot in Twickenham churchyard. But due to a dispute of his widow with Pope over the rights to this plot, Kneller was buried in the abbey in spite of himself.

Latest Frocks of Lacy Open Mesh

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

FASHIONLAND is enjoying the thrill of a new enthusiasm. It's for open lacy frocks. Soaking shoes, hosiery, gloves, dress goods, sports frocks, evening and afternoon gowns, wraps, suits, sweaters, or a blouse, millinery, handbags, or "what have you" in shops, you will be reminded every day in every way that open mesh effects are "it."

Some of the woolen materials are woven so open and lacy one has a feeling they surely are knitted or crocheted. Often these "meshy" weaves are made up with touches of hand crochet to finish them off. At any rate, if madam or mademoiselle aspires to follow in the footsteps of fashion, an openwork knitted or mesh-fabric gown on the order of the up-to-the-minute models pictured is inevitable for midseason and spring.

The good-looking spectator sports dress which you see to the left in the illustration is of bright orange woolen in a knitted patterning which looks very much like allover lace. Its smart, tailored handling adds "class." The coat repeats the white accent which occurs in the yoke of the dress, a whole fox skin forming the collar. The swanky shoes enter into the color scheme most beautifully. Observe that they are very smart open-shank sandals made of exquisite orange-toned kid. According to the style program a big engine is in promise for dainty footwear of finest kid in very lovely coloring.

Black, tangerine and white are cleverly combined in the early spring street costume shown to the right. The open square-mesh material is in tangerine. Its many-gored skirt which slenderizes at the hipline and flares at the hemline is one of the outstanding features of the model. The surprise yoke of white mesh is also voguish.

VELVET IS SMART FOR SPRING WEAR

Many velvets are popping up here and there in the shops.

One of the most effective suits for formal wear combines a white velvet jacket with a black satin skirt. The velvet of the jacket is the new dull-surface variety, and very smart.

Short velvet evening wraps are to take the fashion trenches by storm this spring. They are being shown in every conceivable color, from black and white, through the pastels, to the bright jewel tones.

A black velvet coat for spring wear has barred sleeves starting to flare at the elbow, and gathered into a tight cuff of white ermine. A standing white ermine collar is finished by a black velvet bow, like a Windsor tie.

Spring Suit Must Have Jacket to Be Successful

You must have a jacket with your new spring frock if it is to be a grand success. Of course, the jacket is sometimes a long coat, especially when it comes to the ensembles that are so liked just now. But it is jackets and nothing but in the evening, when the younger set, almost to a girl, steps out wearing some sort of jacket, however brief, with her frock.

Mostly the jackets are of the same material as the frock, and what they lack in length they make up in chic. But to put back to the frock with its coat, that does not match in color or material and yet manages to show that it is the soul-mate of the accompanying frock.

Plaid Gingham

Another southern fashion that will bear watching is the shirt made just like a man's, of brilliant plaid gingham. These are worn with trousers or with sports skirts and have a chic all their own.

The kid opera pumps, knitted turban, and abbreviated fur jacket are in black. A chain motif in gray beige to match the hose trims the shoes. Waist-length jackets of every type of flat fur or of velvet, corduroy or velveteen are outstanding in the new modes.

It is not only for the dress entire that mesh fabrics are scoring a triumph, but for the making of the suit. In this connection mention should also be made of the latest blouse as per Schiaparelli and other Paris dressmakers, which is hand-crocheted of coarse mercerized crochet cotton and worn with the new spring suits.

Another use of French square-mesh hand crochet or of the material which simulates these effects is that of making of them the deep yokes and sleeves such as top fashionable frocks this season, in contrast or of like color.

So popular has the theme of openwork novelties become, some of the shops are displaying accessory sets that include gloves, scarf and bag, all of matching mesh material, either in black, white or bright colors.

Likewise, latest footwear plays up to the flair for open mesh in that chic shoes made of suva cloth (open mesh that looks like lace) are shown at all leading booteries.

Not only are the now-so-voguish mesh and lace-effect fabrics sponsored in street colors and in vivid shades, but they are apropos to spring and summer in a series of delicate color-luza designated by stylists as "water lily shades." These include such delectable tones and tints as pink, petal, water lily green and other as fascinating colors.

HIGH WAISTLINE

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

The built-up waistline is important this season. This smart black and white check wool suit achieves the desired silhouette via a skirt which is brought up high over the blouse. The lining and the blouse are a vivid green crepe. Even when there is a belt, the newer skirts are made to look as if they extend above the normal waistline by means of tabs and various other clever devices.

Safe Food Economy

ANYBODY you may save money on food, you must be certain to include the essential elements of diet. Vitamins A and D are necessary in your meals. These are found in Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil. "A" builds resistance, and helps old and young guard against winter colds. "D" aids in growth and the development of children's bones and teeth. In this emulsion these vitamins may be had in a form easy and pleasing for children and adults to take. Use daily during winter. Scott & Bowen, Bloomfield, N. J., Sales Representative, Harold F. ## First Aid-Home Remedy Week

Chicago, Ill.—"Inure Yourself Against Needless Suffering" is the intensive slogan of personal action which prefaces national announcement that the eleventh anniversary of First Aid-Home Remedy Week has been fixed for March 13-19. The National Association of Retail Drug-Store, sponsors of the plan which Steris Products, Inc., dedicated to the drug world in 1922, is joined in this campaign for nation wide preparation to meet unexpected accident and sudden illness, by the National Wholesale Druggists' Association and the National Association of Retail Drug Clerks.

For the first time all State Pharmaceutical Associations are also co-operating for greater preparedness for the physical emergencies of life. ## Don't Buy Medicine for Stomach Trouble

Accept Bottle Konjola FREE

TO SUFFERERS FROM STOMACH TROUBLE

I want to give every person who suffers from stomach trouble a bottle of America's most famous medicine FREE to try. Particularly those people who have tried many medicines without results. Simply fill out the coupon below and use it. Do this in your own interest.

Why Made

I make this offer because I believe Konjola will help sufferers amazingly. That is, that it will help considerably, over half the people who try it. And that they will keep on using it. I want no money from those it does not help.

You've heard about Konjola. Know that everywhere people tell wonderful stories about it. Know that so many people use it that it is often shipped to many communities in carload lots. Never in the history of proprietary medicine has a remedy swept from one end of America to the other like it has.

Now—so that everybody may try it—I propose to give it away. Hence, nobody can lose finding out whether it benefits or not. So it is folly not to try it.

What Konjola Is

Konjola is a mixture of some thirty-two ingredients; twenty-two of extracts of nature's own roots and herbs, and not one a habit-forming drug.

Now—the functional goal of these herbs and medical ingredients is to mix with the food in the stomach—shortly after you eat—in the effort to help nature throw off the poisons of stomach troubles, rheumatism and neuritis, and to permit the kidneys and liver to function properly.

So amazing are the stories told about Konjola by those who claim virtual miracles for it, that it is taken by probably more people than any other medicine America has ever known. What its exact science life status is nobody knows. But what its possible effects may be makes one of the most amazing recitals in modern-day health annals.

G. H. MOSBY, President of Konjola Inc., who has chosen Konjola as the only medicine to be sold in the United States to the Public.

Try It FREE

Now, whether Konjola will do for you what so many thousands of others have claimed it has done for them—whether it will ease your pain in a day or a week—remains to be seen. But in light of the tremendous Public Acclamation given it, it is certainly a mistake not to try it.

Clip the coupon now. Do it before you forget. Accept a FREE bottle of America's most famous family medicine to try. Find out for yourself whether or not it will help you. Do this in fairness to yourself and your family. Konjola is on sale, too, at all drug stores, if you want to get a bottle today instead of waiting for a bottle by mail. Just ask your druggist for Konjola.

MONEY TO BURN

By Peter B. Kyne

"I've been a dog," he murmured sadly. "It serves me right. Of course I have the nerve of a lion tamer to ask this, but—will you give me another chance, Nellie? Will you take me back—on probation?"

"I accept, I'll take you back—not as a sweetheart but as the dear old friend you were before you told me you loved me and asked me to marry you. Meanwhile, you are not to run away from Piliarcitos. You must stay here and make your campaign for mayor."

"I can never be elected mayor now," he assured her. "That suit and the publication of my letters to Doris—"

"Were they love letters, Elmer?"

He hung his head. "I tried to make them sound that way, but I don't think they were as enthusiastic as ones I could have written you under the same circumstances. Still, I suppose they're silly enough to tickle Piliarcitos to death. They'll be hard for me to laugh off."

"Take the chance," she urged.

Elmer shook his head doubtfully. "I dare not—"

"But you announced your candidacy with a blare of trumpets, as it were. You'll have to enter the fight now."

Elmer shuddered. "But I never intended to run for mayor this year," he protested lamely. "I was merely announcing myself as a candidate to run against the incumbent when he came out for re-election, as I figured he would. Now the infernal kill-joy has disappointed everybody by resigning and moving out of the county, the city council is deadlocked over the appointment of his successor and in order to save their faces they have ordered a special election to decide who shall be mayor to fill the unexpired term. So you see, Nellie, I've got an excellent excuse for withdrawing now. I can say I do not care to make a campaign for the unexpired term, because it will not afford me an opportunity to initiate reforms. All my friends will understand—"

"You remind me of a small boy who whistles up his courage as he passes the cemetery after dark. Elmer, you know very well that if you are elected to fill the unexpired term and make good you can be elected for the next two-year term without half trying."

"No, I cannot. I'll make an announcement in the Clarion that, upon further consideration, I find that my business affairs will not permit of my making the race and accordingly I am withdrawing my candidacy."

"If you do that," Nellie assured him, "you might as well abandon all hope of marrying me eventually. I could never stand a quitter. I want you to enter that fight even if you do lose it."

He squirmed in his chair. "The very thought of it makes me shudder. Nellie. Have a heart! Permit me to withdraw now, marry me and go away with me—to France or Italy—anywhere to escape. Then when the blow falls I'll not be here to be laughed at. Nothing in this world can be of surpassing interest for more than nine days, and in a year or two from now when we return the whole miserable affair will have been forgotten."

"I dare say, Elmer. In that length of time you will have been forgotten, too. You will have lost your leadership, so essential to your future here. You must remain here and build up your leadership."

"Then marry me and help me stand it."

"No. I had nothing to do with getting you into this jam and you'll have to fight your own way out. If you do that, however, the day I find it out I'll marry you. But if you quit, if you run—count me out of your calculations!"

He groaned inwardly.

"You haven't the slightest conception of a woman's pride, Elmer," Nellie went on with motherly tenderness. "That adventuresome is trying to break you, to run you out of your own country. I'm trying to make you, to keep you from being run out. The question therefore resolves itself into this: who is going to win? You are the only human being who can decide that question, and I call upon you to decide it here and now or forfeit, not only the fragments of my former love for you, but my future friendship and respect for you. Speak up, Elmer, or remain forever silent!"

"You win," he declared without an instant's hesitation. "I don't care what happens to me provided I do not humiliate you again. I can take a licking, you know."

"Smiling, I hope."

"Well, at any rate, in silence," said Nellie daintily. "Your courage and sportsmanship are going to be tested in a manner of which you little dream. Our future happiness depends upon how well or how poorly you emerge from that test."

Elmer thought of his love letters to Doris and shuddered again.

"You're not eating anything," Nellie challenged him suddenly. "Why, you haven't taken a single bite!"

"If I did I'd feel as vulgar and insouciant as a pig," he replied.

"Cheer up, Elmer. There is no hell."

"Well, then, I'm up to my ears in—something just as hot." He eyed her half angrily. "And you're the little devil that's stoking the fire!"

Nellie half rose from her chair and leaned across the table toward him. "Kiss me, booby!" she commanded fiercely. And Elmer obeyed.

Up to the day he received, from that anonymous Los Angeles source, the letters he had written his innamorata, Elmer made no progress in the matter of mapping out his campaign for mayor. He was much too nervous, too overwhelmed with grave apprehensions, to focus his mind on this adventure which could only end in disaster. He spent his days fishing and his nights in gloomy meditation.

Longfellow, in his "Hiawatha," observes that misfortunes come not singly. Suddenly came the letter from Doris, charging him with the perpetration of a newer and more despicable crime and vowing vengeance when her time should be up. The receipt of the newspaper clipping solved the mystery of the girl's letter and while Elmer was rejoicing at this infallible evidence of a stay of execution, and making up his mind to make the fur fly in his campaign for mayor now that fate had intervened and given him a fighting chance to win, the packet of love letters arrived.

The comfort that had been his just previous to this was the most extravagant grief in comparison with the delicious delight that descended upon him now.

It was the greatest day in history. When his paroxysm of delight had in a measure abated, he proceeded to read the letters in the order of their dates.

After reading the third letter he shook as with an ague, for he discovered that he had indeed asked Doris to marry him! He essayed to read the fourth letter and groaned aloud. It was terrible. So he burned them all. He was waiting outside the bank when Nellie came out at five o'clock. "Hop into this car and come away with me, Nellie," he ordered, "or I'll kidnap you."

Nellie hopped in, and they whirled away into the country. Once clear of the town Elmer's hand stole over and closed over Nellie's. She jerked it away, but he seized her arm roughly and again possessed himself of her hand, which he retained by brute force. Still he said nothing, so Nellie maintained silence. Presently she spoke, to break an embarrassing silence.

"What have you been doing all day, Elmer?"

"I've been singing."

"Net you a hundred dollars I know what you've been singing."

"Taken. What have I been singing?"

"The national anthem of Blam."

"You lose. I don't know it."

"Oh, yes, you do!"

"What's it called?"

"Whatnasawm!" she informed him. Without a moment's hesitation Elmer Butterworth Clarke took out his wallet and solemnly handed Nellie Cathcart a hundred-dollar bill, and Nellie took it!

When Elmer rose the following morning he remembered that if he had tended to be mayor and doing. He had no time to spare.

His first idea was to contract with the Piliarcitos Silver Cornet band to play at his political rallies exclusively, thus forcing his opponents to import their music expensively from surrounding towns.

The extent of his advertising and the elaborate preparations for his campaign alarmed and irritated his opponents, the alarm being occasioned by first-hand knowledge that they were being opposed by a young, forceful, popular man, without a blemish on his character and with an excellent war record. His strength in fraternal circles was well known, and of course he would get the old soldier vote in its entirety. The irritation of the enemy was born of an apprehension that if they were to oppose him successfully they would have to adopt the pace he had set, which predicted the spending of more money than they cared to think about. Also, they would have to make speeches they were incapable of making with a title of the case, grace and logic of their youthful opponent.

Their best plan lay in ancient political strategy.

By mutual consent the Democratic and the Republican candidates concluded to refrain from fighting each other and concentrate their fire on Elmer.

To Elmer competition was the joy of life. He had been born with the winning spirit and he resolved to leave no stone unturned to secure his objective. However, he overlooked one stone. Nellie Cathcart called it to his attention.

"I suppose, Elmer, you're going to spend a couple of thousand dollars to win an office that pays a salary of only one hundred dollars a month."

"I suppose so. The confounded job is really a nuisance, but now that I'm in the race I'm not going to let a little money stand in the way of victory."

"Well, you had better form the Elmer B. Clarke Campaign committee and permit it to spend that money," she suggested. "Name the committee and appoint me treasurer. You have already spent as much money as you are permitted to spend under the law; if you spend more, you will violate the election law; if you win, your enemies will check up on you after the election, indict you, convict you and deprive you of your hard-won office."

"But I can't pass the hat for my campaign expenses," he protested, bewildered.

"Organize your finance committee, head the subscription list with a fifty-dollar donation and open an account in Anso Moody's bank. Then send your bills to me and, as treasurer, I will pay them."

"But how?"

"Never mind, how. As treasurer that will be my worry. You stick to your knitting."

"But where can you get the money?"

"I'll get it somewhere. Elmer, did you ever see a cat reconnoiter a hole in a fence? He sticks his head through and if his whiskers touch he knows he cannot get his body through, so he climbs over the fence. Well, I'm going to crawl through this hole without touching my financial whiskers."

She did. She gave the Piliarcitos Commercial Trust & Savings bank a second mortgage for two thousand dollars on the property she had bought from Elmer Clarke, and old Anso Moody charged her ten per cent interest on the loan and refused to make it for more than a year. This money she deposited to the credit of the Elmer B. Clarke Campaign committee, and on the day after the election she paid her last bill, closed up her account and had four hundred dollars left.

And on election day Elmer received two votes in excess of the total votes cast for his opponents. It was a stupendous, a sweeping victory, and the politically wise ascribed it to but one thing, to wit, tremendous public admiration for Elmer Clarke's modesty. Throughout the campaign he had not once addressed the local post of the American Legion, nor had he appeared at any meetings of it. He had made absolutely no appeal for the old soldier vote, either verbally or in print; not once had he referred to his war record and cited the fact that he had been in the army. Everybody in Piliarcitos has felt certain Elmer would have won the bloody war, and he had disappointed them; wherefore, in gratitude and admiration, they had elected him.

Nellie was far happier than Elmer when the votes were counted. Elmer had a rather well-defined idea that he had labored and brought forth a mouse—that he had fought for the sheer love of a fight. Now that he had a certificate of election he shuddered to think he would have to use it. But Nellie, her plans for his career long since made, merely checked off another milestone on the road to the heights; and when Elmer, having taken his oath of office, secured a two-weeks' leave of absence from the city council in order to rest after his furious campaign, Nellie was relieved to be rid of him, even for that brief period. Elmer betook himself again to Los Angeles, but Nellie did not keep an eye on him this time. She knew Elmer had had an ample sufficiency of wandering in strange pastures and that the next damsel who "sold him a pup" would have to be adroit to a degree something more than humanly possible.

Upon his return Elmer devoted himself assiduously to his duties as mayor for three months; during which period he saw as much of Nellie as possible. Then, having secured a sixty-day leave of absence from the city council, he departed on his long-deferred trip to Muscatine, Iowa, to settle the estate of his late Uncle Hiram.

For some mysterious reason Nellie was very distrustful the night before he left. In the stuffy parlor of the old Tully home they said goodbye and Elmer was amazed to see her go completely out of control for the first time in their acquaintance. She put her arms around his neck and wept for about five minutes. Elmer was mystified.

In vain Elmer reminded her that he would wire her frequently—long night letters; that he would write her daily and send his letters by air mail; that he would telephone her every Saturday night.

She refused to be comforted and continued to sob:

"Oh, Elmer, you poor boy! You good, kind-hearted, decent old thing, I—I want you to—to promise—what ever happens, you'll—come back—to—to me, darling."

"Why, of course I'll come back to you, Nellie! Why, I won't even look at another girl!"

"I don't mean that. I'm thinking of something else—no matter what—and I want you to—b-b-back. Oh, Elmer, I want you to come back j-j-just as soon as the estate is—c-c-closed."

"Ho-ho!" he laughed. "So that's the way the cat jumps, eh? You're afraid I'll collect my roll and start wandering. You're afraid I'll wander so long and so far I'll forget you, eh? Hum-um! A fat chance. Twenty-four hours after I get home I'm definitely closed I'll be aboard the rattler headed home—but only on one condition."

"I kn-kn-know. Provided I marry you shortly after you return."

"That's the program. How about it, sweetheart?"

"Well, if you'll come back I'll marry you, Elmer. You'll never have to ask me again. All you'll have to do will be to—n-name the day."

"I'll wire you the date before I start west. Word of honor now, Nellie, that nothing—understand, nothing—can induce you to change your mind!"

"Word of honor, Elmer. And will you give me your word of honor that you'll come right back to me when the estate is settled?"

"I do—and I hope my teeth may drop out if I do not."

"And you'll not permit anything—anything in all the world—to make you break your promise?"

"I'd rather see a hungry tramp, without a place to lay my head, than break the least of my promises to you."

She kissed him half a dozen times and thrust him gently out of the door, which she closed upon him and then ran upstairs to her room to have a real cry.

Thus did they part.

Brazilian Nut Pickers Victimized by Buyers

The business of gathering Brazil nuts in the Amazon jungle resolves itself into a skin game for the natives concerned when the traders, who follow the harvest, arrive with their boatloads of nuts and trinkets.

Near a group of huts on the river bank the trade boat stops, writes Hugo Franklin in the Boston Transcript, and there the merchandise is displayed in an improvised "store."

The trader sits, like the spider in his web, behind a battery of jars of rum, surrounded by a few pieces of brightly-colored goods, tobacco, bags of salt, cans of kerosene, sometimes even cases of cheap beer.

The nut pickers could make a good profit on the long trip up the river to the nut forests if only they would shun the trader, but little by little their crop piles up beside the store. At the end of the season the poor natives owe money to the traders and, unhappy and penniless, offer to pay the debt by helping to load the nuts on the boat and work their way back to civilization.

Coursers Des Bois

The coursers des bois, later called voyageurs, were, literally, forest rovers. During the French regime in Canada, the French government, which was interested in the fur-bearing animals, hunting, therefore, and the consequent fur trade with the Indians appealed to some adventurous spirits more than farming, and as a result, a large number took to the forest in the pioneer development of new Canada. They figure picturesquely in early Canadian history and in subsequent action.

JESUS COMFORTS HIS DISCIPLES

LESSON TEXT—John 14:1-18.
GOLDEN TEXT—Peace I leave with you, my peace I give unto you; not as the world giveth, give I unto you. Let not your heart be troubled, neither let it be afraid.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Plans a Home in Heaven.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Plans a Home in Heaven.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus Comforts His Disciples.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Jesus Comforts His Disciples.

The hopes of the disciples were utterly shattered when Jesus told them that he was going away and that they could not follow him. He consoled them by 1. Pointing to the Coming Reunion in the Father's House (vv. 1-3).

1. He asked them to trust in himself even as God (v. 1). Faith in the God-man, Christ Jesus, will steady the heart, no matter how intense the grief or how great the sorrow. Faith in God and Christ is one and the same thing, for Jesus Christ is not merely another God, but one with God. Christ himself is divine and therefore the revealer of divinity. Jesus Christ is the same object of trust as God himself. The believer should repose in him the same confidence and yield unto him the same submission as to God. Trust in Jesus as God is the secret of a quiet heart.

2. He informed them that he was going to the Father's house to prepare a home for them (v. 2). Heaven is the Father's house. Heaven is an eternal dwelling place. There is in it abundant room for all. There are "Many mansions." All who come to God through Christ will find room.

It is a prepared place for a prepared people.

3. He assured them that he would come again and escort them to the Father's house (v. 3). Jesus will not wait for his own to come to him, but will come and call forth from the graves those who have died and transform living believers, taking them all to be with himself forevermore in the heavenly home.

4. Revealing the Way to the Father's House (vv. 4-11).

Jesus informed the disciples that they knew the way to that place to which he was going. To this Thomas interposed a doubt, in answer to which Christ asserts that he is

1. The way to God (v. 6). He is something more than a mere guide or teacher—he is the way itself. He is the door of the sheepfold—the very entrance to the tree of life.

2. The truth (v. 6). He is not merely the teacher, but the truth incarnate. In Christ's incarnation the spiritual and material worlds were united. Therefore, every line of truth, whether spiritual or material, converges in him. No one can ever have the real truth about anything who does not have Jesus Christ. In him we have especially the truth about God. To pretend to know God while at the same time rejecting Jesus Christ is utter folly. Only as Christ reveals God can we know him (John 1:18).

3. The life (v. 6). Christ is not merely the giver of life, but he is the essence of life. Only those who receive Christ have life in the truest sense.

4. Assuring Them That His Work Was to Continue (vv. 12-14).

Jesus' going away was not to end the work which he had begun. This, no doubt, means that through the ministry of the Spirit-filled disciples the work which Christ began would assume larger proportions. There would be a much greater number of converts than under his ministry. The means by which they were to get the power to do such wonders was prayer. God will surely answer prayer, not only because he loves his children, but through answered prayer his own name will be glorified.

5. Promising Another Comforter (vv. 15-17).

The word "Comforter" means literally "one called to the side of another to give help, protection and deliverance." This Comforter is the Holy Spirit. Jesus was the Comforter while here on earth. The Holy Spirit was to continue upon which they might enjoy the comfort of the Spirit was obedience to Jesus (vv. 15-17).

6. Assuring Them of His Return to Them (vv. 18-24).

Although Jesus went away he did not leave his disciples as orphans. He is spiritually present all the time. The Father and the Son make their abode with the disciple who loves and obeys Jesus Christ.

Trust the Lord

Difficulties afford opportunities for learning God's faithfulness, which otherwise we should not have. It gives me great comfort to remember that the work is his; that he knows how best to carry it on, and is infinitely more interested in it than we are. His word shall not return unto him void; we will preach it then, and leave results with him.—Hudson Taylor.

Gratitude is the continuous echo which our hearts give to God's mercy.

Neal's Mother Has Right Idea

Within a few months there will be no more feverish, bilious, headachy, constipated, pale and puny children. That prophecy would surely come true if every mother could see for herself how quickly, easily, and harmlessly the bowels of babies and children are cleansed, regulated, given tone and strength by a product which has proved its merit and reliability to do what is claimed for it to millions of mothers in over fifty years of steadily increasing use.

As mothers find out from using it how children respond to the gentle influence of California Fig Syrup by growing stronger, sturdier and more active daily they simply leave to tell other mothers about it. That's one of the reasons for its overwhelming sales of over four million bottles a year.

A Western mother, Mrs. Neal M. Todd, 1701 West 27th St., Oklahoma City, Okla., says: "When my son, Neal, was three years old he began having constipation. I decided to give him California Fig Syrup and in a few days he was all right and looked like again. This pleased me so much that I have used Fig Syrup ever since for all his colds or little upset spells. It always stops his trouble quick, strengthens him, makes him eat."

Always ask for California Fig Syrup by the full name and see that the cartoon bears the word "California." Then you'll get the genuine.

Manure piled outside of the stable windows gives no farm relief. Get it out on the land.

With the present depleted supply of good stallions, it is high time for stallion owners to do away with the absurd agreement of waiving payment of fees until the new foal is born.

When sows farrow, let the pigs out on clean sod within a week, or put pieces of sod in the pen where the young pigs eat it. This will prevent anemia in the pigs.

Feed pregnant sows well but don't let them become too fat. Liberal feeding of alfalfa hay or alfalfa meal with some grain helps to prevent over-fatness, furnishes protein, saves grain and keeps the bowels in good condition.

Cultivation is not a satisfactory remedy for a pasture that is called "sod bound." In such pastures the sod has become too thin because through years of pasturing or overgrazing the fertility is depleted. The use of a high grade fertilizer will strengthen and thicken the sod and increase the pasture carrying capacity.

"NO rage like love to hatred turned," has its converse in the experience that no passion is more enduring than that of a hatred which grows into love. It is as though the small seed of affection finds nurture and strength in the opposed and more wasting forces. A case in point is illustrated with tensely dramatic interest in this unusual story—a romance of hearts throbbing to contrary emotions, but which, by gradual and insensible processes, are brought into perfect union.

Look Over Your Garden Supplies

By T. E. MYERS, County Agricultural Agent of DeKALB COUNTY

LOOK OVER GARDEN SUPPLIES

How Much Should You Grow

Lettuce and radishes enough for the community, but a shortage of early green peas, was the cause of remark of a 1931 gardener. Why not profit by the mistakes of last year and plan to balance the 1932 garden to meet the likes of the family?

Now is the time to take stock in your cellar in order to see how much your garden produced for winter use. If you grew too many perishable summer crops, so that a large proportion of them were wasted or had to be given away, you can correct that this year. The best way of checking up on the all year value of the garden is to go into the cellar and count the cans of vegetables and number of bushels of beets, carrots, potatoes and other root crops.

Many gardeners plant vegetables that do not do well in their garden because soil or climate is not adapted to their development. It is better to eliminate these if you have been finally convinced that you can't grow them.

If your garden has had failures of some things and not enough of others plan your 1932 garden with this in mind.

How close did you plant your vegetables last year? Was it too close to allow easy cultivation and room for the vegetables to make good growth, or did you waste space by making the rows too far apart? In making your garden plans this season remember to allow a fair amount of space between the rows.

Did you have a good deal of thinning to do? Remember that seed is scarce and labor valuable, so do not sow any more seed than necessary to get a good stand. Do not try to use up the seed just because you have it. Save it for next year. The less thinning you have to do, the less expense and labor you will have and the stronger plants you will get. Plants growing close together tend to become spindling in their efforts to reach more sunlight. They are weak and, therefore, do not produce as large crops. Plan carefully, the distance between rows in your garden and figure the minimum amount of seed you should buy.

HARLAN

Mrs. Glen Lake is ill at her home.

Miss Agnes Hass spent the week-end at her home in Pierce-ton.

R. R. Murphy and family moved onto the Hod Herrick farm recently.

Feeder pigs can usually be raised cheaper than they can be bought.

S. V. James visited his son, Sam who is seriously ill at Ft. Wayne, Saturday.

Born to Mr. and Mrs. Darwin Amstutz Wednesday, March 22, a daughter.

Mr. and Mrs. Joe Twerrell, of Auburn, visited in the Fred Minick home Sunday afternoon.

Mrs. Alyce Hulsberg and daughter, Patsy Jean are visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Archie Cummins.

Merritt T. Millman, of St. Joe, has taken charge of the Boston Barber Shop in the absence of the proprietor, who is spending the winter in Florida.

Miss Esther Baird, school librarian, gave instruction to the pupils of the Freshman and Sophomore classes in the use of the encyclopedia and dictionary at the High School Monday.

Friends and relatives of R. B. Mills surprised him Sunday at his home in Fort Wayne, in honor of his 24th birthday. Those present were Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Mills, Mr. and Mrs. George Guiff, Mr. and Mrs. Will Yontz, Mr. and Mrs. Ira Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Tracey Gratz, Mr. and Mrs. R. B. Mills, Miss Jessie Koch, Eugene Hare, Garnet Mills, Bob Mills, June and Bobby Belout, Chloe, Gaylord, Gerald and Wilbur Yontz, Irene, Margaretta and Louise Guiff, Esther and Albert Gratz, Art Boterf, Virgil Shoewater, Dessie Widdifield, Ruth McCurdy, Carl Gifford, Donald, Evelyn and Wayne Shook, Inez Lantz and Lois McCurdy.

Of course the amount and quality of vegetables you can grow on any space depends largely on fertility of soil, available moisture supply, cultivation and quality of seed planted; but general estimates help in approximating the needs of the family. The following estimates are based on what may reasonably be expected if you have good soil, use proper fertilization, and take proper care of your garden. From 100-foot rows you may get the following yields: Bush string beans, one to three bushels. Bush Lima beans, ten quarts. Beets, carrots, parsnips, turnips, salsify, two to five bushels. Sweet corn, eight to thirteen dozen ears. Irish potatoes, one to two bushels. Early cabbage, sixty-five heads weighing one and one-half to two pounds each. Late cabbage, fifty heads weighing three to four pounds each. Onions, two bushels. Peas, one bushel. Tomatoes, five to eight bushels.

From the above list, if you know approximately how much of each vegetable you can use during the year, you can figure the space you must allow for summer use, and canning.

Some other vegetables not included in the above list should find a place in the home garden. Fifteen or twenty feet of Swiss Chard will supply greens for summer table use and canning for the average family. Half a dozen parsley plants will provide garnishing and flavoring greens.

You do not need to supply space for early radishes. Mix a few radish seed with your parsnips and salsify at seeding time. Your radishes will be large enough to eat before the other plants in the same rows get large. A few mango plants will give you a constant supply of this vegetable while a short row of leaf lettuce will be enough to supply salad for most families.

(If you wish a copy of suggested plan for the home or farm garden, a trip or letter to County Agr. Agent's office will bring it.)

EDITED BY DOROTHY EDMONDS

The Spin Game

First mount the card diagram on some cardboard to make it last. Take small pearl buttons and paint them different colors. These are your men. Six players can be in the game. Place one man on each little section in the center and shake up six numbers, each player choosing one. The player who gets the number one takes a step on the diagram and so on. Each player has the same number of steps on it. Player number one plays first, shaking a pair of dice to find out the number of spaces he may move. Each player then does the same in turn and the player going down one side of the circle and up the other first, coming back into the center with a throw of one, wins. The last throw must be a one or the player must lose his turn and wait until he does throw one.

The Centipede and Me

Now what in the world can a centipede do
With one hundred legs, when I've only two?

I sometimes do manage to trip one of mine,
Does he do the same with his whole ninety-nine?

My Mother says, "Gracious, your shoes are not neat!"
But what would she say if I'd one hundred feet?

My two muddy shoes leave their prints on the rug—
It's fine I'm not one of those centipede bugs!

If I find it hard to tell left foot from right,
Oh dear me! Just think of the centipede's plight!

And isn't it lucky when time comes to eat

That I have two hands instead of just feet?
So Centipede, you have hundreds or more
If I did, I'd never know what they were for.

The Kitchen Cabinet

SANDWICH IDEAS

Sandwiches are in season all the year, although we serve them more often perhaps during the warm weather when food is served out of doors. Coffee goes with hot sandwiches, served, too, all the year round but enjoyed more perhaps in the cool and chilly days of autumn and winter.

Here are a few suggestions which may be varied as one finds an ingredient lacking and supplies it with another:

Cheese is so well liked that it is one of the most popular of sandwich fillings; here is one:

Make a paste of seasoned soft cheese—a bit of cream may be added to soften—add a suspicion of mustard and a dash of chili sauce. Spread on strips of bread, cover with thinly sliced bacon and toast under the flame until the bacon is crisp and the cheese soft and melted. If one does not like mustard add a dash of horseradish.

Hot bacon with sliced chicken, a dash of prepared mustard, sautéed in butter, or toasted, is a fine filling for sandwiches to be served hot.

Toast bread, cover with a generous dab of Welsh rabbit and top with a poached egg. Serve with a nice slice of pineapple or any preserves or a slice or two of orange.

Hot bacon in toasted sandwiches with a sliver of herbuda or mild onion between makes a most appetizing tidbit.

Season sardines with a few drops

My Neighbor Says

AN ONION and green pepper and a tomato stewed together and put through a sieve, then strained and chilled and added to well-chilled mayonnaise in equal quantity makes a Russian dressing superior to that in which chili sauce is used.

It should never be necessary to tear up good linen for handkerchiefs in emergencies. Keep old rags and cloths, boil and iron them and put away. You may need them some day.

An electric flashlight put in a stocking will enable one to do a very fine job, as all threads show up clearly. This is also a splendid idea or darning on a dimly lighted porch.

To keep boiled icing solid, add a pinch of baking soda to the whites of eggs before beating.

Eat, Smoke, Read and Bathe in New Zeppelin

Friedrichshafen.—Lying in a bathtub 20,000 feet above the earth, smoking a cigar and reading a book, is one of the unique sensations promised in the new giant German air liner, the Zeppelin L. Z. 120, now under construction at Friedrichshafen.

Costing over $3,000,000 the L. Z. 120, with its more than 600,000 cubic feet of helium gas, its two decks and two bathrooms, will represent the most luxurious airship of its kind ever constructed. It will be twice as large as the "Graf" famous for its globe-circling voyage, and only a few feet shorter than the giant ocean liner Bremen.

The new Zeppelin will be able to carry 52 passengers and eight tons of freight. Its upper deck, Deck A, will comprise 26 cabins with two beds each. Its lower Deck B will include a promenade deck 45 feet long, a spacious dining room, a parlor, a reading room, smoking room and library. An electric kitchen will supply passengers with regular four-course dinners.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

by WALTER TRUMBULL

She was a light opera singer, young and beautiful, and she married a well-known govt. Two temperaments were one too many in the same family, so finally they were divorced. Then she married a wealthy broker. This time it looked as if everything was smooth sailing. They had plenty of money, a lot of friends, and they got along beautifully. Then something took the wall out of Wall Street and in the tidal wave which followed, the man's fortune was washed away almost to the last dollar. They must have been fond of each other, for poverty has not parted them. She has a job as a singer in a cabaret. He always is on hand to take her home. That is not hard. He is, you see, one of the waiters.

Residents of East Fifty-seventh street were startled to see a young man walking along, grasping a large bird. The bird rigidly held its head high and made no resistance. As a matter of fact, this may have been due to the fact that it was stuffed. The man was Dr. Laurence M. Gould and the bird was the giant penguin which usually stands in a corner of his living room. A book store wished to use it in connection with a window display of Doctor Gould's book, "Cold," and he was searching for a taxi to transport the penguin to its new setting. Moreover, he was becoming a little annoyed as several taximen, after a quick glance, appeared deaf to his hails and drove rapidly away. This might have been due to the fact that, as he held the bird in front of him, its head towered above his and rather hid him from view. The general effect was that of a moving and weird looking fowl about seven feet tall. When Doctor Gould did induce a taxi to stop, he poked the bird in so forcibly that its bill almost went through the glass behind the driver's head. Then there was more delay while he convinced that driver that the penguin was really dead and had not tried to bite him.

Here is a tip for housewives: Should your husband happen to bring Maximilian Otto Seigfried Schmeling, present heavyweight champion, unexpectedly home to dinner, don't worry if you don't happen to have ducks or chickens in the ice box. All you need to do is to take what remains of the duck or roast beef and put with it some potatoes, onions, tomatoes or whatever else happens to be hand. Mr. Schmeling's favorite dish is meat stew.

Cardini, the famous magician, was born in Wales, but is now an American citizen. He was wounded in the war and used to amuse himself in the hospital by practicing sleight-of-hand tricks. Later, he got a job with a man whose business was making apparatus used by magicians. Cardini probably is the most air minded of all prestidigitators. His entire act consists in pulling things out of the air. First he snatches hundreds of playing cards from the ozone. Throwing these away, he reaches out and plucks clusters of billiard balls. If he set his mind to it, he probably could make it rain cats and dogs.

"DEAD AS A HERRING"

EXCEEDINGLY colorful and logical, is the fisherman's way of saying "dead as a herring." Ask any fisherman and he will tell you that the herring has the peculiar characteristic of dying the moment it leaves the water.

Very few men recall ever having seen a herring alive; and this is because the instant it is taken out of its aquatic habitat, it makes one convulsive movement and expires.

Hence the expression "dead as a herring."

New Automatic Rifles

Menace to Airplanes
San Antonio, Texas.—Airplanes, which strafed ground troops with such immunity in the World war, will not escape unscathed in the next conflict, antiaircraft tests at Camp Bullis here indicate.

Troops of the Third brigade fired at a towed target of the approximate size of a fuselage. With automatic rifles, 3.61 hits were registered for every 100 rounds fired. Rifle fire scored 2.73 and machine guns 1.90.

In a sudden air attack, 1,000 rounds of automatic rifle and rifle fire would register 32 hits, according to this average.

The target was towed at an elevation of 400 to 600 feet and at a speed of 90 miles per hour.

RESTFUL SLEEP for FRETFUL, FEVERISH CHILD

—With Castoria's regulation

When your child tosses and cries out in his sleep, it means he is not comfortable. Very often the trouble is that poisonous waste matter is not being carried off as it should be. Bowels need help—mild, gentle help—but effective. Just the kind Castoria gives. Castoria is a pure vegetable preparation made specially for children's ailments. It contains no harsh, harmful drugs, no narcotics. Don't let your child's rest—and your own—be interrupted. A prompt dose of Castoria will urge stubborn little bowels to act. Then relaxed comfort and restful sleep! Genuine Castoria always has the name:

David was a manly boy and Job was a bolly man.

MUSCULAR-RHEUMATIC PAINS

DRAW them out with a "counter-irritant." Muscular lumbago, soreness and stiffness—generally respond to good old Musterole. Doctors call it a "counter-irritant" because its warming action penetrates and stimulates blood circulation and helps to draw out infection and pain. It gets action and is not just a salve. But do not stop with one application. Apply this soothing, cooling, healing ointment generously to the affected area once every hour for five hours. Used by millions for over 20 years. Recommended by many doctors and nurses. All druggists.

To Mothers—Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

Two Shanghais

Moving Freight on Shanghai's Bund.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service. SHANGHAI, which because of military activities became the center of world interest as the new year got under way, grew inevitably to be the most important commercial city in China. The first important factor in this growth was the city's location near the mouth of the Yangtze river, Asia's greatest natural trade artery. A second reason for growth was the fertility of the surrounding region, the Yangtze's delta, which has been called "China's garden spot." Finally, Shanghai has had time in which to develop, and western guidance; for it was one of the first Chinese cities to be opened to westerners and western trade, one of the five original "Treaty Ports" established in 1842.

This designation of Shanghai as a treaty port 60 years ago has resulted in the dual character which the city now possesses. For there are two Shanghais: the closely-built, teeming native city, and the foreign concessions with their wide streets and houses and their solid, western-type buildings. British merchants were the first to move in after the opening of the port in 1842. They obtained a concession to manage their municipal affairs in their settlement. The French and American residents joined in the arrangement, but later the French set up a municipality of their own which maintained separate laws. Residents of other nationalities have thrown in their lot with the British and Americans, and today about twenty nations have arrangements with China in connection with trade and extraterritorial rights in Shanghai.

The entire urban group—Chinese, French and International—that bears the name "Shanghai" has a population in excess of one and a half million people. By far the larger part is Chinese but the concentration is not greatest in the narrow-streeted, dirty, smelly native city. So well have the foreigners governed their concessions that Chinese have flocked to those sections. The international city is especially a favorite residence for retired Chinese officials from other parts of the country. It has become a model, too, in the matter of street pavements, drainage, sanitation and police methods, and since the revolution has been copied extensively by Chinese cities in other parts of the country.

Not on the Yangtze. Shanghai is near the mouth of the Yangtze river and close to the Grand canal. Around it for many miles stretches intensively cultivated gardens. This strategic situation has made the city not only a great commercial emporium but as well one of the greatest Chinese industrial centers.

In sense, however, the city is out-of-the-way. It is not directly on the Yangtze, but on a tributary, the Hwangpoo (Whangpoo) twelve miles from the great river. The meeting place of the two rivers is called Woosung. The largest ocean steamers cannot ascend to the city, but must anchor in the Yangtze estuary near Woosung and tranship passengers and freight to steam tenders. Smaller ships can cross the bar, however, and the war vessels of many nations are constantly on duty off the Bund.

As one approaches the city from Woosung, the villages, graveyards and anchored ships of all kinds become more numerous as he draws near the wharves. The hum and roar of factories and cotton mills in peaco time belie the real atmosphere of this metropolis of central China. It is not until the heavy, half-sickening smell of bean oil, incense, opium smoke and of human beings penetrates the nostrils that the true Asiatic flavor of the city is revealed.

Although the quaint Klansin junk are rapidly disappearing, the carry junks, sampans, and speedy slipper boats still vie with the motor launches of huge steel and wooden vessels from every port on the globe.

Shanghai, like Venice, is a city built largely upon piles sunk far into the soft black sand and saturated clay upon which the city rests along the banks of the Hwangpoo river. Huge reinforced concrete rafts are buried in this clay, and the foundations of the buildings are laid on them.

The foreign settlements are delightfully modern, with plenty of space, light and air, and are as clean and orderly as occidental cities. The French maintain their own concession under a government separate from that of the other twenty powers, with their own language and the "rues," "quais" and other signs typical of the homeland.

Gay City in Peace Times.

The hybrid city of Shanghai—a city of both East and West—is in peace times what many a traveler finds Paris is supposed to be but isn't: perpetually gay and carefree. Europeans and Americans, forced by business or government assignments to live there on the other side of the world in a none too kindly climate, seem with one accord to have determined to make the experience as pleasant as possible. White men's working hours might have been framed by a visionary Socialist for the year 2000. Many offices open at ten o'clock, grant a rest period from twelve to two, and close at four so that harassed merchant and banker could go to the club or to the casino or tennis court, put links or horseshoes, for what Robert Louis Stevenson called "the real business of life."

The Bund, the waterfront thoroughfare of occidental Shanghai, is normally crowded with prosperous, unburied westerners; and Bubbling Spring road of an afternoon is thronged with stylishly dressed men and women of leisure and fashionable equipages that would do credit to Fifth avenue, the Champs Elysees or the Ring-Strasse in the days of Vienna's glory.

The city is thoroughly cosmopolitan. Perhaps no other city of the world surpasses it in this respect except Cairo. Every western country has nationals in Shanghai, and there are besides representatives from all parts of Asia.

In the Old City.

In striking contrast has been the old Shanghai, where most of the Chinese live. Going through the gates of the native city one passed into another world. Old temples, cramped courtyards, where flowering peonies and chrysanthemums could be glimpsed in passing, and an endless succession of narrow streets, hung with red lanterns of Chinese characters, and filthy and reeking with a thousand odors, differentiated it at once from its smaller modern cousins but a short distance away.

A tea house set in the middle of a stagnant pond is one of the breathing places of the old city, where sellers of jade and cheap jewelry, letter writers, fortune tellers, cobblers, menders, peddlers, jugglers, and others of Shanghai's polyglot population gathered over teacups or chattered endlessly in high-pitched voices. The Chinese theater is another native oddity. The want of scenery, the din of the orchestra, and the piercing intonations and gaudy costumes of the actors furnished a spectacle, which, while not always pleasing to western tastes, was always colorful and unusual.

Shanghai's sobriquet, "The Paris of the East" has referred more to the gaiety of its social life than to any external resemblance to the French capital. It is not nearly so picturesque as Hong Kong, or that queen of oriental beauty, Foochow. Shanghai cannot set out a thousand lanterns on a dozen hills 1,800 feet up into the night, as Hong Kong can, but her more intimate houses and garden decorations have been famous. There were lanterns everywhere, certain types were used as shop signs, and with their non-sputtering cold tallow candles they shed a perfect light.

Along Bubbling Well road in happier days a panorama of the city's life passed in review. Once the resort of closed broughams and fine cars of foreign dignitaries, it has lately echoed to the rattle of anything that can go on wheels, and the rickshaws and wheelbarrows of the natives, darting in and out among the carriages, taxis and limousines, have furnished a gay and motley spectacle all day long.

Shanghai is not only a great commercial emporium, handling nearly half the foreign trade of China, but it has also become, in recent years, one of the greatest Chinese industrial centers, with a large laboring population. Cotton and silk cocoons winding mills employ thousands of workers. In addition there are large numbers of smaller factories, manufacturing matches, paper, cigarettes, fireworks, wood carvings, jewelry, etc.

Much of the occidentalization that has come to China in the past half century has filtered through Shanghai, especially through the great printing establishment there which has turned out excellent translations into Chinese of the literature and ideas of the west. Shanghai also possesses several daily newspapers, printed in both foreign and native languages.

THE DAIRY

EXPERT ADVICE ON HANDLING OF BULL.

Herd Sire Must Understand Man Is Master.

Most accidents occur with gentle bulls that have been trusted too much. Every herd sire should be taught to know that the man is master and any person attempting to handle a mature bull without a ring in his nose, is risking his life.

This is the expert opinion of Fred M. Hulg, in charge of the dairy herd, and associate professor of dairying, at North Carolina State college.

"We have two Jersey bulls in our herd here that the average dairyman would consider too vicious to handle," says Mr. Hulg. "Yet these bulls are taken out of their stalls every day, are brushed and given exercise. In doing this the animal is so handled that there is practically no danger of his injuring any one. The bulls have been taught that man is the master and we are careful that they do not have the opportunity to learn of their great strength by breaking away. The bulls are handled without displaying fear, yet are watched as if they were seeking a chance to gore the attendant."

Mr. Hulg says every bull should be broken down, and when he is about one year old should have a ring put in his nose. Dehorning is not advised. The college bulls are handled with great ease by leaving the horns on. A strong chain is placed about the base of the horns and stays there at all times. Then when the bull is taken from his stall for exercise or milking, the lead chain is passed through the nose ring and snapped to the chain about the horns. After this chain is attached, the attendant may drive the bull with safety. Should the bull give any trouble, a slight whip of the chain will quickly quiet him down.

Mr. Hulg says it is poor practice to confine the bull and thus ruin his health, or to kill him for meanness when he may be of great value. Proper handling will permit him to be kept until the end of his useful years.

Low-Producing Cow Not Worth Cost of Keeping

At no time has the low-producing cow been so great a luxury as today, says E. E. Anderson, of the New Mexico Agricultural college.

Low-producing cows are never very profitable, but with present prices they are indeed a luxury and are losing money to their owners every day. The end part of the situation is that a large part of the herds are composed of cows supporting one or more of these unprofitable non-producers, and in most cases the owners do not realize it. The only sure method of knowing whether or not every cow in the herd is more than paying for her board is to keep records of her production. The most practical system of record keeping now in use, where herds are small and scattered, is the milk order cow testing plan which is being employed in the eastern counties of the state. The cost of this system of detecting the low producer is so little that it is within easy reach of all.

Salt the Dairy Herd

A supply of salt should always be available, so that the cows may have it when they want it. Salt stimulates the appetite, assists digestion and assimilation, and increases the flow of fluids of the body, stimulating all the vital functions of the animal. Salting once a week is not sufficient. Where it is not possible to provide a cover for the salt box, rock salt may be put in the pasture, but it is not advisable to depend on the cow eating enough rock salt to satisfy her, because her tongue often gets sore from licking the salt. As the cows become accustomed to it, they should be fed a small amount of salt each day, and this gradually increased until they receive all they want. An overdose of salt acts like poison, and may cause serious results.—Dakota Farmer.

Cows Like Machines

Dairy cows are manufacturing machines but they are grown on the farm instead of being purchased from a manufacturer. They are designed by the live-stock breeder instead of by the draftsman. Only the designs of the capable breeder can be trusted to give good service. In a manufacturing plant, each piece is inspected for imperfections. The imperfect parts or machines are discarded. So, too, with the breeder, the mistakes and poorly constructed machines (animals) must be and are discarded by the good breeder.

Healthier Milk Industry

A better adjustment of supply and demand has brought about a healthier condition in the milk industry which will gradually become apparent in the next few months, according to R. F. Beach, executive secretary of the Michigan Milk Producers' association. However, he says, "This does not necessarily mean that producers soon will receive predepression prices, nor that consumers will pay high retail prices." Still, there is encouragement in the prospect.

HEADACHE

Nerves on edge. A head that throbs. You can't stop work, but you can stop the pain—in a hurry. Bayer Aspirin will do it every time. Take two or three tablets, a swallow of water, and you're soon comfortable. There's nothing half-way about the action of genuine aspirin. If the box says Bayer, you will get complete relief.

These tablets should be in every shop, office, and home. Ready to relieve any sudden ache or pain, from a grumbling tooth to lumbago. Don't suffer with that neuralgia, neuritis, rheumatism, etc.; or lose any time because of colds or sore throat. Get some Bayer Aspirin and just follow those proven directions for instant relief.

Get the genuine tablets, stamped with the Bayer cross. They cost very little, especially if you buy them by the bottle. Any doctor will tell you they are harmless. They don't hurt the heart. They don't upset the stomach. So take them as often as you have the least need of their quick comfort. Take enough for complete results.

BAYER ASPIRIN

"Helpful" English. An English professor has chosen 850 words of "basic English" which provide a vocabulary for ordinary communication, to be used as an auxiliary world language and also for the use of foreigners who find English bewildering.

OBITUARY

Mark Benner Shull, eldest child of Thurman H. and Eva S. Shull was born in Concord Township, DeKalb County, Indiana, July 1, 1894, and departed this life at Fort Wayne, Indiana, March 1, 1932; age, 37 years and 8 months.

He was educated in the District schools and Spencerville High School, graduating with the Class of 1914; subsequently completing his education at Terra Haute Normal School and Tri State College of Angola, Indiana. He became a very successful teacher in the DeKalb County Schools for a period of eight years.

He was affiliated with the Coburn Corners Church of Christ at an early age, transferring his membership to the Waterloo U. B. Church when he moved to that city. He was constantly active in church work at the various places where he resided. A keen Bible student and exceptionally talented in voice and elocution, his services were eagerly sought and were freely given.

He was united in marriage to Ruth Hurni, July 14, 1917. To this union two children were born, Carol Arlene age 12 and Evely Marie age 10.

Mark Shull as a youth inherited and developed an estimable trait for righteous living, honesty of purpose and intent, and a desire to live a life beyond reproach. His later life proved the value of these deep seated characteristics by the high regard and esteem of all his friends and acquaintances.

He is survived by his bereaved wife and daughters, his mother, three sisters; Mrs. L. A. Mercer, Hicksville, Ohio, Mrs. George B. Hart, St. Joe, Indiana and Mrs. Mark E. Stuck of Garrett, Indiana; one brother, Garth D. Shull, St. Joe, Indiana; his father having preceded him in death. He also leaves a host of relatives and friends who will mourn his departure.

Funeral services were held from the home church at Coburn Corners on Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock. Rev. Miller, pastor of U. B. Church at Fort Wayne officiated, assisted by Rev. J. N. Scholes and Rev. Walter Coburn of the home church, and Rev. Lewellen of the Waterloo U. B. Church. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director.

Oh, who will walk a mile with me Along life's merry way? A comrade blithe and full of glee, Who dares to laugh out loud and free, And let his frolic fancy play, Like a happy child, through the flowers gay, That fill the field and fringe the way.

Where he walks a mile with me, And who will walk a mile with me, Along life's weary way? A friend whose heart has eyes to see

The stars shine out o'er the darkening sea, And the quiet rest at the end of the day; A friend who knows, and dares to say, The brave, sweet words that cheer the way.

When he walks a mile with me, With such a comrade, such a friend, I fain would walk 'till the journey's end, Through summer sunshine, winter rain, And then—farewell, we shall meet again!

CARD OF THANKS

CHICAGO'S 1933 EXPOSITION SEEKS THRILL AREA NAME

In 1933 they called it the Midway, in 1904, the Pike, and in 1916, the Zouave.

But whatever the name, it represented to millions of visitors to the Chicago, St. Louis and San Francisco world's fairs the epitome of fun, mystery, romance, thrill and devil-may-care spirit.

What to call it in 1933 at A Century of Progress is a problem worrying Dr. F. R. Moulton, director of concessions for Chicago's 1933 World's Fair, and erstwhile head of the astronomy department of the University of Chicago.

"The mechanical and synthetic breath-takers at Chicago's 1933 World's Fair, will be as far advanced over the devices that made our mothers and fathers and grandparents gasp back in 1893 as our symphonies of colorful illumination will be over the incandescent glow that awed them way back then," said Dr. Moulton.

"The 1933 version of the chute will carry thrill-seekers not merely to the water, but under it! The 1933 version of the dip of the scenic railway will carry riders not merely down steep inclines, but over apparently sheer precipices and to lurking sea monsters. On the other hand, the sentimentally pretty Old Mill Stream will be transmuted into the ultimate of serenity and fairy beauty."

Dr. Moulton disclosed that besides the amusement area proper, between Twenty-third and Twenty-first Streets, there will be various other features which may include a Chicago Hollywood, a fairyland for children, a zoological garden with animals in the open, Indian villages, South Sea savages and African pygmies.

In addition, there will be track meets, football, baseball, championship boxing and wrestling contests in Colder Field stadium—in fact the whole gamut of athletic sports. There will be rodeos, pageants, processions and the greatest musical festival ever held in this country.

"Our amusement area will represent the last word in amusement park thrills," said Dr. Moulton. "What we now need is to have some genius suggest a name for it as full of meaning and appeal as Midway had in 1893."

If you've got a good name, send it to the Director of Concessions, A Century of Progress, Administrative Building, Burnham Park, Chicago.

SCOUTING AND THE SCHOOL

Scouting, while no substitute for school work, does provide a program for utilizing some of the inappropriate time of the boy. Only about one-ninth of a boy's year is spent in school. Nearly one-third of his life is spent in sleep—the remaining five-ninths of his days is relatively unorganized and undirected.

It is these hours that Scouting fills with attractive, useful, moral and character-building activities.

The test of an educational program is not how good it looks on paper, but what it "educates"—what it causes to happen in the boy's mind. Scouting reaches the boy, it actually "works." It therefore offers to schools certain significant contributions.

1. Its Methods—of enlisting and using boy interests. The merit badge program may awaken or hold a boy. It further is a powerful tool toward intelligent vocational guidance.

2. Its Morale—The Scout spirit is soon reflected in a better school spirit, which results in less difficulty, fewer dropping out.

3. Its Moral Values—based on habit, for the Scout Oath and law become habitual. The "wood-turn" turns up in school. It is indeed conceivable that Scouting may become a natural school vehicle for supplementing moral instruction, because Catholic, Hebrew and Protestant Churches alike have officially adopted Scouting as part of their boy program.

4. Its Fixation of Habits—Scouting gives the opportunity to exercise and practice civic virtues thus rendering them permanent.

5. Its Physical Values—The physical welfare program of Scouting supplements admirably the school effort as it provides practice.

6. Its Citizenship Through Service—Scouting builds citizenship through the living service of citizenship. This is clearly the secret of superiority of its results over those from mere book study of citizenship.

This latter is intellectual, while Scouting is functional, based on "fundamental" boy interests and "formed" habits.

7. Its Spirit of Democracy—Scouting is at once democratic in its membership and in its internal life. Its recognitions and advancements are based solely on what the boy can do and be.

8. Its Dignifying of Labor—The Scout must "Be Prepared." He must be able to do things with his hands as well as his wits. With his ideals there goes a parallel training of hand which it once spells skill and a dignifying of labor.

9. Scouting and School Marks—As Scouting should closely supplement the school effort, the Scoutmaster should check up the school scholarship of his boys. While no general conclusions are drawn, the following "findings" at Shelbyville, Indiana, are at least interesting.

Forty-five Scouts were chosen from the seventh and eighth grades. It was discovered that their school averages were 84.9%, their grades running from 85.2% down to 80.9%; while 55 other boys were chosen whose grades averaged 80.2%. Their averages running from 88.3% to 79.3%. In the High School all of the Scouts passed while 32 other boys did not.

Some Scoutmasters cooperate by receiving regularly the Scout's school reports—enabling them to help keep the boy's standard high. Montclair, N. J., has a High School Scout Association from various troops which cooperated with the school authorities in all matters touching Scouts who are students there. Scout discipline and morale are maintained.

Scouting is, in the judgment of leading educators, to quietly exert more of such leavening influences in our schools. The school which not only reaches the boy in school, but which, about the school as focal point, mobilizes the leisure and interest of its boys—that school can build manhood.

From the Scoutmaster's Manual.

SOUSA, THE MARCH KING, DIES SUDDENLY

John Philip Sousa, who died suddenly at Reading, Pa., was known throughout the world as "the march king." He and his band were looked on almost as a national institution. His marches are in a class by themselves and are popular and appreciated in the farthest corners of the world. Sousa and his march compositions occupied much the same position in the musical world, particularly of a few years ago, as did Strauss as the author and interpreter of waltz music.

Bandmaster Sousa has been seen and heard by more of his countrymen than almost any one in any line of activity. He and his organization had traveled over the country repeatedly and were enjoyed by thousands in every city of any importance in the United States. He toured Europe four successive years and made a trip around the world, and each of his excursions to foreign lands was a repetition of the successes he had scored at home.

FILE THAT MORTGAGE EXEMPTION NOW

As in past years, The News is prepared to file that mortgage exemption now, beginning March 1 and continuing until May 2.

The law provides that an owner of real estate having a mortgage on his property can by filing a certified statement with the county auditor obtain a credit not to exceed one-half the assessed valuation, or more than $1,000 if the indebtedness existed prior to March 1 of the present year.

Hundreds of DeKalb county real estate owners take advantage of this law and in most cases the exemption is the maximum allowed. The description of the property, the name of the holder of the mortgage and its amount must be set out in the blank and the instrument must be sworn to before a notary public.

The law also provides that any soldier or sailor who served three months or more in the army or navy of the United States during the Civil or Mexican War, and who shall have reached the age of seventy years, or more, may have $1,000 deducted from his taxable property where the total assessed value of his taxables does not exceed $5,000 as shown by the tax duplicates for that year, and the balance constitutes the basis of taxation.

The widow of any soldier or sailor who shall have reached the age of sixty years or more is entitled to a like exemption. Soldiers and sailors of other wars and their widows have the same rights, but must have like qualifications as to age, etc.

As a matter of thrift, this should be taken care of at once and in so doing, bring your tax receipt so as to get a description of the property under mortgage.

KAFFER CORN FOR FALL PASTURE

Plant in grain drill one bushel to the acre and in a long strip in acres, use the farmer's judgment according to the amount of stock he has. Cows will eat it and do well on it. Hogs, horses, sheep, will also eat it, along a pasture or lane so it will be handy to mow off with a brush-scythe. A clover seed or a wooden fork is handy for the purpose, let it lay there beginning at August 1 for the rest of the fall, and some left cut it in to shock size of usual corn shocks let it set in shock for it is juicy, haul it in at interval as you want to feed it in winter, the seed is good chicken feed.

BELIEVE IT OR NOT A BEAR CHASED HIM

We've heard of fish stories but we'll be darned if we've ever heard of a bear story!

As you all know, our basket ball team went to Angola to play Waterloo, Friday. Well, as the story goes, they got beat—and how!—and this is the way it affected the coach, Mr. Noffsinger:

Friday night the team stayed at the Angola hotel. Mr. Noffsinger occupied a room with two of his players. During the night the boys were awakened by the sound of glass breaking, and lo and behold—there was Mr. Noffsinger on his hands and knees, with his head covered. We don't know whether he was ashamed of himself or whether he just slept that way.

Here's the explanation he offered the boys: "Believe it or not, a bear was chasing me—he was running fast but I was a bit faster. Well, I came to a brick wall, and I couldn't jump over it, so I tried to kick it down. But the wall mysteriously changed into a glass window and if the falling glass hadn't made so much noise, the bears might still be chasing me—but not here!"

Well, Mr. Noffsinger felt very put out about breaking the window—and so did the hotel manager!

This I know to be true because I heard it all through the keyhole.

—The Keyhole.

SPENCERVILLE TAKES SECOND IN COUNTY TESTS

Auburn placed first in the reading and chorus events in the DeKalb county music and literary contest Thursday evening at the Auburn M. E. Church. Ashley won the vocal solo event. Contestants from seven high schools in the county were entered in the competition, Auburn taking two firsts and a second; Ashley one first; Waterloo one second; Spencerville one second; and Garrett, three third places. In the vocal solo, Carl Brand of Ashley received first place; Betty McCullough of Auburn second and Robert Beehler of Garrett third. The reading event went to Alice Brown of Auburn with Eunice Shilling of Spencerville second and Kathryn Kennedy of Garrett third.

retted third. Auburn placed first in the chorus; Waterloo was second and Garrett third. The judges were Prof. R. J. Hughes of Angola, Miss Hilda Gatwood, supervisor of music in the Steuben county schools and Miss Wilma Dick, the Noble county music supervisor. In the reading event Mrs. Dean Cline, a former Angola school teacher, Paul Haller, principal of the Waynedale school at Fort Wayne and Miss Bertha Perkins of Stroh, were the judges. Ribbons were awarded first place contestants in each event. The church auditorium was filled completely for the annual contest. Carl F. Stallman of Auburn, county superintendent of schools, presided and presented the ribbon awards. On next Thursday evening the high schools will contest in discussion, piano solo and double quartet at the Auburn Methodist Church.

personal property made to County Assessor, Chas. Miser by the township assessors Saturday indicate that satisfactory progress is being made. However, it is expected a great loss in the totals will result in the appraisal of personal as compared with previous years.

The assessors are having their most serious difficulty in fixing the taxable valuation of real estate. The farm bureau is insisting upon a 50 per cent cut in farm land as compared with the last assessment in 1928. Three members of the bureau in each township have been appointed to confer with their respective township assessors and the county assessor. These conferences will be held between now and Saturday, March 26. On that date the township assessors will meet and try to reach an agreement. The work of assessing real estate will then be undertaken.

In the meantime the assessors are getting ready by securing the descriptions of the real estate and of the improvements, including houses, barns and other buildings. The state board of tax commissioners provided the assessors with new blanks this year that will contain the descriptions of the buildings in detail, including material used in construction, size, date built, number of stories, number of rooms, built-in conveniences, bathrooms, kind of heating and lighting plants, water systems, and cost.

WAYNE STORER WAS RUSHED TO HOSPITAL

About 4:30 Sunday morning, Master Wayne Storer was stricken by acute appendicitis. During the forenoon he was rushed to the Lutheran hospital and operated on at once. Had he been delayed in reaching the hospital a few hours, the physician stated that his case might have proved fatal, as the developments showed a very aggravated condition. Last word is that he is getting along fine.

bile in order to make a trip to East St. Louis, Illinois. Passing the Lutheran Church they took Hiram Mason's car, heading for Garrett where they bought gas, and then started toward Fort Wayne.

When discovered that the car was missing, Sheriff Hoff was called and he in turn sent a message to Fort Wayne and it was broadcast over the police station, an officer taking the description of the car, the thieves drove past and were soon apprehended, all within an hour's time. They were returned to Auburn and Monday were given 1 to 10 years at the state farm by Judge Endicott.

STRICKEN WHILE AT WORK WIPING DISHES

Mrs. Sadie Coburn, 69, wife of W. P. Coburn, east of town, died Tuesday night at 11 o'clock, following a stroke at 6. Mrs. Coburn had not been well all winter, suffering from gall stones, but was improving so as to be about the home again.

She was wiping the supper dishes Tuesday evening when stricken. Mrs. Delphia Shafer, of Warsaw, was called and arrived just before her mother passed away.

The funeral will be held from the Coburntown Church Friday afternoon, at 2 o'clock.

SCOUTING AND THE CHURCH

Over half of all Scout Troops are connected with churches.

This fact reveals clearly that Scouting has a real contribution to make to the Church.

Among its outstanding values are:

1. It provides a habit rather than a precept basis for morals. Living the oath and law is entirely different from hearing it read and discussed.

2. Its program is built about recreation which is educational. Scouting under church auspices gives the Church a chance to become the "hub" of the wheel of the boy's recreation.

3. Scouting offers the Church a seven day program, but leaves specific religious instruction to the church of the boy's choice.

4. It grips the boy's interest, holding him to the church by an added and powerful bond. It means more boys and later more men in the Church. In the Sunday School it means more boys, more regularly and more permanently.

On another page in this issue our readers will find an important article written by former President Calvin Coolidge, entitled, "To Bring Back Prosperity." We know every reader will be interested in reading such an article by such a writer, whether or not they agree with all that he says.

It is not often that the newspapers of America are able to secure contributions to their columns by a man of such standing as an ex-President of the United States, and we feel that we are unusually fortunate in this case in being able to present to our readers in their home paper an article by an ex-President of our nation.

CHAPTER XIII

Mr. Absalom McPeake's secretary came into his office and handed him the card of Mr. Elmer Butterworth Clarke. Employer and employee gazed at each other humorously.

"Oh, what a fall was there, my countrymen!" murmured McPeake.

"It's much too bad," his secretary declared. "Such a nice-looking young man, too."

"Does he bear a family resemblance to that terrible old uncle of his?"

"About as much as a hunting watch resembles a grandfather's clock. Shall I show him in?"

"I suppose so. Let's have it over with."

A moment later Elmer was ushered in. McPeake greeted him cordially and after a few minutes spent in polite amenities Elmer ventured to inquire in what condition the estate might be.

"In very excellent shape indeed, Mr. Clarke. All of the minor bills of the estate have been paid, with the exception of current monthly charges; the appraisers have completed their task, their report has been filed and about all that remains to be done is to pay the federal and state income taxes and inheritance taxes, the cost of probate, my fee as executor and attorney for the estate, the few specific bequests contained in your uncle's will and that old mortgage."

"I supposed you had paid the mortgage to avoid interest charges," Elmer remarked.

"Not yet. There isn't sufficient money in the estate to pay it."

"Strange! I gathered from your first advice to me that there was quite a sum on hand in cash, and also a couple of hundred thousand dollars' worth of marketable securities. I also understood that this mortgage was for a sum of forty thousand dollars."

"That is the principal sum. Perhaps I'd better start in at the beginning and tell you the story as your uncle told it to me the day he made his will."

"Perhaps that would be better," Elmer suggested.

McPeake thereupon permitted the blow to fall. For about ten seconds Elmer stared at him unblinkingly—then a slow, amused smile lighted up his face. "So forty thousand dollars, at eight per cent, compounded semi-annually for forty-two years, amounts to all that, eh? Suffering muds! I should have known there was a catch in this will somewhere!" And he laughed gently.

"I'm sorry, Mr. Clarke, but there's no way out for us. The record speaks for itself, your uncle's will gives us no alternative, and the next of kin to Benedict Catherton has been discovered and has proved her case!"

McPeake looked his visitor over humorously. "I could furnish you with her name and address," he suggested.

"Then you might hunt her up, court her, marry her and get the money back into the family."

"Thanks. Not interested. There's a girl back in Pilarcos, Calif., who claims all of my sentimental attention. I hope to tell you I wouldn't lose her for a sum equal to the national debt."

"Bully for you, Mr. Clarke! And by the way, I must say I have never seen a man take such a loss with a smile before. I'll say you're game."

"Can't lose what I never had, Mr. McPeake. By the way, was the record of this old mortgage among my uncle's papers?"

"Oh, yes! Your uncle never destroyed anything."

"Well, if I had found it, I would have suspected that the mortgage had not been paid, otherwise there would have been a copy of the release among his papers. So I would have run the record down and paid it myself. Uncle Hiram worried unnecessarily."

"You would have paid it yourself—with interest compounded?"

"Certainly. A note is a note, just as a bet is a bet."

"But I—well, Mr. Clarke, I was going to suggest to you that we might get together with the present holder of that mortgage and effect a settlement. The deficiency judgment is outlawed and if we made a poor mouth and told her that a large portion of the estate consisted of real estate not readily salable, we might get her to abate the compounded interest. Or we might induce her to accept a lot of dead real estate at inflated values—fix it with the appraisers at public auction to reapraise the property."

Elmer raised his hand protestingly. "You're proposing something dirty, mister," he said evenly. "Get this, my friend: All the dirt rights of the Butterworth tribe stood in the name of my late uncle, and I'm not going to join with you or anybody else to take advantage of a woman. A contract is a contract, and if I lost every dollar of the million dollars I thought I had, that's my funeral and I refuse to attend it!"

McPeake was embarrassed. "Well, don't think any the less of me for suggesting it," he pleaded. "Some day you or I may use the more of me for suggesting it." He smiled smugly, after the fashion of one whose head is quite filled with valuable secrets.

"I suppose it's a lawyer's duty to protect his client's interests, and I suppose, too, it is natural that folks should disagree as to what constitutes 'dirty' treatment," Elmer replied grudgingly. "So I'll forget your suggestion. Just don't make another one like it."

"Fair enough. I'll make one the very reverse of it. Mr. Clarke, for more than a quarter of a century your uncle had a very confidential employee—a sort of chief clerk, manager and man Friday—one Bunker. Bunker is one of those mossy little men who are whipped in the battle of life the day they come into it. A retiring, timid, faithful, obedient, hard-working, brainy, efficient habit of a man. His job with your uncle was the first job he ever had—and he is still on the estate pay roll, helping me close up odds and ends of business matters.

"Very early in life he made a mistake. He married—and had children—grave hostages to fortune, as it were. So his job was bread and butter and he never had the courage to quit and seek another. I think it must have occurred to your uncle, from time to time, that the impossible might happen and he would lose Bunker's services, so he promised Bunker he would leave him one hundred thousand dollars in his will. This promise he repeated from time to time, but when it came to making his will he betrayed private banking business—or was it a pawn broking establishment?"

"I've said it at a very good figure and the probate court has approved the sale."

"When the estate is finally settled, what do you think my share will amount to?"

"Oh, I should say, offhand, a quarter of a million dollars."

"Well, I'll always be a millionaire in Pilarcos. I've been duly advertised as such and while I continue to pay my bills I'll have the credit rating of a millionaire. That will help. I can go just as far on credit as I can on cash. Just won't go so fast, that's all."

He rose to go. "I think I'll go on to New York and see some good shows," he informed McPeake. "Despite the wallowing you've handed me, I think I can afford a month or two of Broadway. After all, a quarter of a million is better than a poke in the eye with a sharp stick. I'll hang around Muscatine a few days and sign any papers you may require."

He took a cheerful departure. The instant the door closed behind him McPeake rang for his secretary. "I've always heard that out in California they grow things big," he informed her. "Big potatoes, big pumpkins, big cattle and big boost, but if Elmer B. Clarke is a sample of her manhood, California grows the biggest men I ever hope to see. That boy certainly can take a licking standing up."

"Take a letter to Miss Nellie Cathcart, care Pilarcos Commercial Trust and Savings Bank, Pilarcos, Calif. 'Dear Miss Cathcart: Your sweetie arrived today and while any preliminary warning I slipped him the fatal tidings, but withholding your identity, of course. He can lose a million dollars and put his bright daydreams behind him with as much grace and humor as if he reckoned his loss in depreciated German marks instead of all the way. He's a man, and should you permit him to escape you will suffer an irreparable loss. He uses his head entirely for thinking. Pilarcos is lucky to have him for its mayor-elect. Please see to it that politics don't spoil him. Yours sincerely,'"

"Now make out a petition to the probate court for the sale of all the real estate of the Butterworth estate, and I'll have Mr. Clarke and Bunker sign it. Then make out an order of sale for the court to sign, and in about a month from now we'll distribute the estate and send Elmer back to win the capital prize in the little lottery you tell me you heard of. He won only to lose, and he will lose only to win. That Nellie Cathcart must be a very unusual woman. She had a curiosity to discover whether or not Elmer Clarke could fit Kipling's recipe for manhood. Remember the lines?"

If you can meet with triumph and disaster And treat those two impostors both the same.

"Well, I'm banking on Elmer."

CHAPTER XIV

The following afternoon, when Elmer again called at McPeake's office, he found Bunker there. The lawyer introduced them. Elmer greeted the old clerk pleasantly but without enthusiasm, and McPeake saw by his quick appraising glance that he was striving to find in Bunker's personality a reasonable excuse to be decent to the old fellow.

They chatted together for an hour and then Bunker withdrew.

"Well, what do you think of Bunker, now that you've met and talked to him?"

"He's a future little old rat," Elmer declared promptly. "He took on the protective coloration of his surroundings. Like all weak men, he could, I think, be very cruel. I've been thinking over his case and I've decided not to make him a gift of ninety thousand dollars. I cannot afford the philanthropy, and whenever I turn philanthropist Bunker isn't the sort I'd select as the object of my solicitude. He tells me the old man paid him fifty dollars a month to start and after ten years he was earning two hundred. Not so bad. The federal government doesn't do half so well by its employees. I've started ten years and when I quit I won't be earning two hundred a month. For ten years before he died Uncle Hiram was paying him four hundred dollars a month. As clerks are paid, Bunker has fared far, far better than the majority, and I fail to see where he has any kick coming."

"I had an idea he'd broach the subject to you, Mr. Clarke."

"Probably afraid to do so. Wanted

Separated by only a vague line of demarcation from the division called the Lowlands, the Scottish Highlands may be briefly described as that portion of the north and northwest of Scotland and where the Celtic language and man-ners have less or more lingered until modern times. The "Highlands," as it is usually called, extends diagonally across Scotland from Nairn on the Moray firth to Dumbarton on the Clyde; but the mountainous part of the counties of Banff, Moray, Aberdeen, Kincardine and Perth are also understood to be included in the designation "Highlands." Calithness might be excluded as being a generally level country; but throughout the Highlands there are rich level tracts, none being more so than the eastern division of Ross-shire. The Hebrides or Western Isles are included in the Highlands, but the Isles of Orkney and Shetland, though to the north, are distinctly excluded by reason of the Norse origin of their inhabitants.

WHEN my pay was cut I had to think of ways to save. My pal told me about Target and I tried it. Now you couldn't get me to smoke any other kind of cigarette, but the ones I roll from Target. Target's a real cigarette tobacco and with those gummed papers you get free, it doesn't take a magician to roll a cigarette that looks just like a ready-made. Think of it, gents! Savin' half a buck a week and smokes better than ever."

MONEY-BACK GUARANTEE

For 20 ready-made smokes you pay 6¢ federal tax (plus a state tax in some states). With Target you pay only 1¢. And your dealer offers you a money-back guarantee if you don't say Target is better than any other cigarette tobacco you have ever rolled.

Liver Stores Heat

Dr. Henry G. Barbour of Yale university recently reported to the National academy that the function of the liver is that of saving heat when the body is chilled or at the onset of fever.

This Little Girl Got Well Quick

"Just after her third birthday, my little daughter, Connie, had a serious attack of intestinal flu," says Mrs. H. W. Turnage, 217 Cadwalder St., San Antonio, Texas. "It left her very weak and pale. Her bowels wouldn't act right, she had no appetite and nothing agreed with her. Our physician told us to give her some California Fig Syrup. It made her pick up right away, and now she is as robust and happy as any child in our neighborhood. I give California Fig Syrup full credit for her wonderful condition. It is a great thing for children."

Children like the rich, fruity taste of California Fig Syrup, and you can give it to them as often as they need it, because it is purely vegetable. For over 50 years leading physicians have recommended it, and its overwhelming sales record of over four million bottles a year shows it gives satisfaction. Nothing compares with it as a gentle but certain laxative, and it goes further than this. It regulates the stomach and bowels and gives tone and strength to these organs so they continue to act normally, of their own accord.

There are many imitations of California Fig Syrup, so look for the name "California" on the carton to be sure you get the genuine.

To Bring Back Prosperity

BY CALVIN COOLIDGE

If all the money in the country were divided equally—

ONE of the serious results that come from the experience through which our country has been passing for the past two years is a loss of faith. Because some have put their trust in things which they have found do not always endure, they draw the hasty and unwarranted conclusion that it is useless to have faith in anything. They propose to abandon all standards, seek only the easiest course, and live merely for the present, on the theory that they may as well eat, drink, and be merry, for tomorrow they die.

It cannot be denied that many people have had an experience which at first thought seems to warrant such an attitude. They had profitable employment on which they believed they could rely for a permanent income. That has gone, and they are unable to secure work. They had a house which ultimately they expected would be their own and would make a home for themselves and their family. They have been unable to meet the payments due on it and have seen it taken from them. Others have found that investments on which they relied for provision for their old age have turned out to be of much less value than had been supposed. Some have met with losses through the failure of banks in which they had money deposited.

It is easy, in these circumstances, for the individual to conclude that these disasters have arisen through no fault of his own, that it must be the fault of someone, and he is inclined to blame something he loosely calls society. Sometimes a feeling of injustice results in a threat of defiance against constituted authority. Among all these people, those who most strongly appeal to our sympathies, those who seem most warranted in their discouragement, are the ones who want work and cannot find it. But even they should take the larger view of their situation. It is no new experience for a wage earner to be without employment. Such a condition has always been temporary. It will be temporary now. Surely the country will go back to work, back to production and consumption. The condition of the wage earner in America has long been the despair of all the rest of the world. Some hope should be derived from what has been and some confidence entertained that the same again shall be.

But a new element has entered into the situation of the unemployed. Heretofore, few have known anything about it, few have cared anything about it and nobody has done anything about it. Now the whole nation is aroused. There is scarcely a hamlet in the land where there is not an organization and active public effort for the relief of the unemployed. They will be cared for in an unprecedented way. We have had a tremendous spiritual awakening concerning our duty to relieve human suffering. It is true some homes have been lost through default of payments. That risk is always incurred when property is bought on credit. But even in this field, where one home has been lost, an enormous number have been retained. Their owners now find themselves securely and comfortably housed because they saved money and bought when they had an income, instead of spending all their money on rents and expensive living.

If all those who have bought homes in the last twenty years could be assembled, it would be found, in spite of some failures, that, as a class, they were distinctly better off than their neighbors.

The desire to build and own a home is one of the primal human instincts. It is especially strong in women. Even the present age of hotel apartments and flats is not likely to eradicate so strong a natural longing. But those who have given up the effort in despair or disgust certainly must live somewhere—if not in their own house then in the house of someone else. Their real position in the world is disclosed by supposing that everyone else followed their example. The whole race would be without shelter in about a generation.

Those who have come to the conclusion that they will do nothing to make themselves a home are injuring themselves most, but they are also injuring the whole community.

Any such scheme of things as their actions presuppose could not be put into effect. Nature and reason are both opposed to it.

When we examine the complaints of those who have lost through investments we find that they fall into three classes: Some lost because they were plainly swindled. We are enacting more and more laws and setting up more and more regulations and safeguards to prevent a recurrence of such abuses. The practice of swindling is very old, and largely has never been eradicated from any community where property was abundant. But because someone does wrong does not prove that we shall all abandon trying to do right.

Others have used poor judgment in investments. Usually they have been tempted to take large risks by the hope of making large gains. Some did not make great profits, while many more suffered heavy losses.

Those who trust to chance must abide by the results of chance. They have no legitimate complaint against anyone but themselves.

Still others, using all the judgment possible for human beings and guided by the best financial advice obtainable, have seen their investments seriously impaired. But this simply means what everyone should know; that even when surrounded by all the safeguards and all the integrity which it is possible to secure, the ownership of property involves a risk. No law, no regulation, no government supervision, no skill in management, has ever been devised that could protect invested property from temporary fluctuation and occasional loss. These are the hazards of our finite existence. Only omniscience can guard against them. But that does not excuse us from making the most of what we have and doing the best we can.

While no one can tell with certainty what will happen to particular property or what the market will do at any in life, we must take the risk of being responsible for the results.

If we could lay the blame for present conditions in our own country or in the world on society at large, against whom is the blame to be assessed? It is impossible to point out any general moral lapse, any widespread dishonesty. We may say it was the result of greed and selfishness. But what body is to be specifically charged with that? Were the wage earners too greedy in getting all they could for their work? Were the managers of enterprise, big and little, too greedy in trying to operate at a profit? Were the farmers too greedy in their efforts to make more money by tilling more land and enlarging their production?

Even if we could convict society on a general charge of selfishness, we could not point to any element that consciously brought about a condition of falling prices particular time, the best financial judgment expects that, while further losses may accrue, sometime the general level of good standard properties will rise, so that some of the present losses will be reduced. Future prices at which property will sell are always uncertain. There is no one to be blamed for what is unavoidably true. The great fact of life is uncertainty. The only thing we can do is to recognize the uncertainty and govern ourselves accordingly.

It is true that a considerable number of people have suffered through bank failures. In a time of declining prices the banks that have not been well managed always have difficulty. Some also that through no fault of their own have met losses have been compelled to close. But that does not mean a total loss of deposits. Sometimes the loss is heavy, but sometimes payment is made in full. In any case, funds are tied up and much inconvenience results.

Our national banking system is as sound as generations of experience have been able to make it. Most of the states follow a similar system. The nature of investments is regulated by law, and most banks are carefully supervised, rigidly controlled, and frequently examined by government agents. While absolute safety has been impossible to secure, it is probable that the records of money deposited in properly regulated banks in this country would show over a series of years that it has been in the safest place to keep funds.

Banks are an absolute necessity for the transaction of business. If it were possible to conceive of all of them being closed, starvation would face most of us inside of ten days. They exist to facilitate the process of exchange, which is the basis of all business. They are one of the main sources of credit, on which our economic welfare largely depends.

It is apparent that if their source of currency were cut off by people taking money out of banks and hoarding it, locking it up, or hiding it away, our banking system soon would become deranged and the whole nation would begin to suffer losses. Loans would have to be called, mortgages canceled, prices would fall, wages declining, credit would fail, and a general panic would be produced.

If all the people attempted to draw their money from the banks, all commerce would be reduced to barter, and universal bankruptcy would prevail.

While particular banks may become unsound, we can feel adequately certain that our banking system as a whole will not become unsound. If it ever did, we should find that the money we had hidden away had become unsound also. It would not be possible to buy anything with it. All exchange would be at an end. Even payments by the federal government would have to be suspended. While keeping money in banks involves some risk, because possession of property always involves risks, it is a risk that must be taken. Compared with the certain calamity that would result if the people drew all money out of banks, the risk can be considered as negligible.

Those who are engaged in hoarding currency are probably no safer as a class than those who keep their funds in the banks. They are injuring themselves and everybody else. They are in the position of not taking their part of the risks of life and are trying to make themselves safe by letting others carry the risks for them.

It might be a great personal comfort if we could lay all the blame for our misfortunes upon some source outside ourselves. That is why it is easy to convince some of us that we have not failed, but society has failed. Of course, it would follow that if society were to be blamed for our failures, that some society must be credited with our successes. If we want to look at it that way we shall have to admit that on the whole, society in this country has done very well by us. Our country, over its span of history, has been considerably of a success. But while there is a relationship of all of us, which we term society, that differs from each of us, just as a house differs from the individual bricks in it, yet people are not bricks, and moral responsibility cannot be shifted to others. It must rest with the individual. The same society produced Paul and Jesus, Washington and Arnold, Lincoln and Tweed, Edison and the gang leader.

If we are to be free to make our own choices

Diet Didn't Do This!

HAPPY little girl, just bursting with pep, and she has never tasted a "tonic!"

Every child's stomach, liver, and bowels need stimulating at times, but give children something you know all about.

Follow the advice of that famous family physician who gave the world Syrup Pepsin. Stimulate the body's vital organs. Dr. Caldwell's prescription of pure pepsin, active senna, and fresh herbs is a mild stimulant that keeps the system from getting sluggish.

If your youngsters don't do well at school, don't play as hard or eat as well as other children do, begin this evening with Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. This gentle stimulant will soon right things! The bowels will move with better regularity and thoroughness. There won't be so many sick spells or colds. You'll find it just as wonderful for adults, too, in larger spoonfuls!

Get some Syrup Pepsin; protect your household from those bilious days, frequent headaches, and that sluggish state of half-health that means the bowels need stimulating. Keep this preparation in the home to use instead of harsh cathartics that cause chronic constipation if taken too often. You can always get Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin at any drug store; they have it all ready in big bottles.

"Don't be in a hurry," is no invitation to stay.

High Grade Seed Essential

By T. E. MYERS, County Agricultural Agent of DeKALB COUNTY

"Last year I had almost every shape and color in my early turnnip patch—my tomatoes when they began to ripen showed pink and red types," writes a home gar-dener. This again emphasizes the fact that as ye sow so shall ye harvest. Good seed from an hon-est seedman is the first essential to a real garden. The planting of varieties suited to your soil is just as important as proper soil texture, high fertility, frequent tillage, skillful watering or thor-ough spraying.

Many a gardener has grown a wonderful crop of vines but found to his disgust that the fruit was of inferior quality and size. The call for pure bred and true to name seed is growing louder. Gardeners should make sure that only this sort is purchased.

Good seed must meet the follow-ing essentials: (1.) It must be true to name and not mixed; (2.) The seed must be of best type and strain; (3.) A high percentage of seed must be able to grow under favorable conditions; (4.) The seed must be free from weak seeds; (5.) It must be free from other foreign materials such as grit, sticks and other material not removed in cleaning. To make sure of your seed, buy only from thoroughly reliable sources, as you can't tell good seed by its looks.

YE GOOD OLDE DAYS

Ye good days there gone some say
But we don't feel we can speak that way.
Perhaps, you'll say they sure don't know
Just what they're trying to say.
Well, now, be careful, Mr. Sir.
For we shall try to prove
That in some ways we are alright.
And can get you from the blues
Now, don't you all remember
Those days when you were young?
And the school house on the corner
With mirth and vigor rung.
When on an evening you could go
And help the district out,
By giving just your presence
And a dime or so, no doubt.
Now, Friday eve, fellows, don't forget
At seven o'clock or so,
Just crank old Lizzie up and fetch
Your Gal to Boots School.
And make her promise that she'll bring
A box filled with things to eat.
For you know we all enjoy a treat.
Just three miles west of Spencerville,
We'll try to fill you up
With pies and coffee, and also a good hot dog.
We'll also try to cheer you up
With music and some fun.
And then no doubt, we hope you say
You're glad that old days rule
For you can say, you know,
You were at BOOTS SCHOOL.

RADIO PROGRAMS PERSONALITIES

GLADYS RICE

GLADYS RICE's stage debut was made when she was three years old. It was a first appearance which rather startled her parents. Gladys, you see, was the daughter of the famous stage team, John S. Rice and Sally Cohen. As such, she often stood in the wings and watched her parents engage the interest of their audiences. Once, as Gladys stood enthralled with the passionate love scene in which her father was engaged, she suddenly broke from her nurse and ran to him, crying "Daddy, Daddy."

It brought the house down. Now, with somewhat more preparation, she appears regularly before microphones to entertain millions with her soprano voice. And radio is a friendly medium for her. She prefers it to the no-magic life of the theatre which is her heritage. Now, living with her mother in their charming Manhattan apartment, she finds time in the intervals between rehearsal and broadcast to read and answer the thousands of letters which come to her from shut-in, adolescent admirers, and girls aspiring to her career.

It was Roxie who gave Gladys her chance. Her father, knowing the hardships of a stage career, had done his best to persuade her from following it.

But when at school at Ivy Hall, her singing in concerts and operettas made her more than ever determined that she should go on the stage. Gladys went to Roxie, who, in his kindly fashion, gave her an audi-

WORLD'S DEBT TO WHITMAN AS POET

Modern Writers Fulfilling His Prophecy.

American poetry in the still young Twentieth century underwent momentous changes of mind and heart. We have witnessed a renaissance, a new birth, almost a revolution, which is not concluded, but is in vigorous process.

It is a chapter in the complex chronicle of thought, culture, life of our time; it is a beautiful, vital, heartening chapter in a record much of which is not lovely, as many of the poets have felt and sadly sung. They have done much to interpret and redesign the evil and to glorify the good. Our poets are intensely American without being provincial; modern as this morning's sun, but not ignorant of man's oldest traditions or unaware of the timeless values. Even when there is no visible trace in them of Whitman's form and individual thought, many of them are fulfilling in their private ways the prophecy which he made of poets to come after him, the declaration of independence which he pugnaciously announced and of which he was in his own time the military signer.

It is our generation—not the decades before us, not the men who were children during his maturity—it is we and not our fathers who have fully understood Whitman. He set American verse free long before "free verse" was talked about. It was not in form, but in substance that he sought liberation for himself and his successors.

He believed, and his successors all believe, all take it for granted no matter what their special subjects, that anything under heaven or beyond can be expressed in the open daylight of poetry. He protested against bookish words and poetic diction.

Our poets can be ardent and rhetorical and swing through the heavens with verbal voluptuities, but most of them aim at simplicity and find new richness in the old words that are the life of us and can never be worn out. The verbalizer who uses a rubber-stamp phrase will be plied or laughed at by his brethren, sent to the foot of the class until he learns better.—John Macy in Current History.

Short-Sighted Germans

Statistics derived from investigations conducted by the German government show that Germany may very properly be designated as the "land of the shortsighted." Nowhere else in the whole world is there a country where there is a larger percentage of near-sighted people. Of the German states where vision defects are most pronounced, Saxony was discovered to be at the head of the unenviable list. There, out of every 1,000 adults, more than 200 are affected with myopia.—Neues Wiener Tagblatt, Vienna.

IMPROVED SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON

Lesson for March 20

JESUS DIES ON THE CROSS

LESSON TEXT—John 19:17-23; 25-30. GOLDEN TEXT—For I delivered unto you first of all that which I also received, how that Christ died for our sins according to the scriptures.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Gives His Life for Us. JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus Gives His Life for Us. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Jesus Dies for Us. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Why Christ Died.

This lesson presents the greatest tragedy of all time. No record in the annals of history approaches it. It is in a real sense the climax of all history. Though unique in its blackness, from it flows streams of life and liberty for all the world. It is highly important that every teacher have the personal experience of Christ's death for himself and then endeavor to get his pupils to see that Christ's death was instead of their own death. We escape judgment because the judgment we merited fell upon Christ.

I. The Place (v. 17).

It was on a hill called in Latin "Calvary" and in Hebrew "Golgotha," which in shape resembled a skull. This hill is a few yards outside Jerusalem. This is a most significant name for the place where man's redemption was accomplished. The skull is an apt picture of man's condition as a result of sin—life and intelligence gone, leaving only the dark empty cavern.

II. His Companions (v. 18, cf. Luke 23:38).

Two malefactors were crucified with him. Their names are not given. This was in fulfillment of Isaiah 53:12, "He was numbered with the transgressors." He was sinless, but became sin for us.

III. The Inscription over Him (vv. 19, 20).

It was customary to place an inscription over the cross, stating the crime for which the victim suffered. Although Pilate did this in bitter irony and contempt, he uttered a great truth, affirming more than he intended.

IV. Gambling for the Garments of Jesus (vv. 23, 24).

This was a fulfillment of the scripture, "They part my garments among them, and cast lots upon my vesture" Ps. 22:18. This is an exhibition of how men's hearts may be so calloused as to plan an act for present gain under the shadow of the cross of Christ.

V. Utterances from the Cross (vv. 25-30).

1. "Behold thy son"—"Behold thy mother" (vv. 25, 26). In this crucial hour he forgot his own bitter anguish and interested himself in those he loved. This is a fine example of human sympathy, and especially of filial love at its best.

2. "I thirst" (v. 28). As the sinner's representative, he suffered not only untold agony of mind, but of body as well.

3. "It is finished" (v. 30). While no one can fathom the depth of meaning in these words, they no doubt indicate a. That the calamities and indignities heaped upon him were at an end. His trial was grossly illegal. False witnesses were employed to incriminate him.

b. His awful sufferings were at an end. The penalty of the unnamable and indescribable sins of the world were resting upon him, wringing from him the pathetic cry, "My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?"

c. The fulfillment of every type and prophecy.

d. His life of perfect obedience.

e. The great work of redemption. "Finished" means more than ended. It means "accomplished." All that he started out to do was now completed.

f. The judgment of the world and the casting out of Satan. (See John 12:31.)

"From this point on there was no more humiliation, insult, or outrage. From the moment when the spear-thrust made it certain that he was actually dead, no cherished infant form could be more tenderly taken in arms, wrapped in clean linen with aromatic spices, and laid at rest in a faultlessly clean chamber. Neither was he ever again seen by an unfriendly eye. Truly, as to all sorrow and suffering and vicarious agony, it was finished."

VI. His Death (v. 30, cf. Luke 23:44, 45).

His death was voluntary. It was unlike any other death in all history. By an act of sovereign will he dismissed his spirit. No one took his life from him. He had power to lay it down and power to take it up again. So shocking was the crime that nature herself threw around the Son of God a shroud to hide him from the godless crowd. Darkness was upon the land at noonday.

SOLEMN THOUGHTS

Tact comes as much from goodness of heart as from fineness of taste.—Endymion.

Reserve is the truest expression of respect toward those who are its objects.—De Quincey.

"As time passes, the sinner will center in self and become more selfish, and a Christian's life will center in God and become more Christ-like."

Wear Silk Shorts as Farm "Uniform"

Dame Fashion wreaked havoc for a time in the lives of Russian village women. The trouble all began after the war when it became fashionable for women to wear short skirts. That fashion also became prevalent in the Russian villages, bringing sorrow to the women.

The women were and because the fashion magazines told about short skirts, but told nothing about what should be worn underneath these skirts. And women in the Russian villages suffered for a long time from this lack of information, for no matter how they sat in the short skirts, the lace of the long pantalettes protruded.

This crying need of Russian women was met by the co-operatives, which turned out an infinite quantity of silk shorts. Hence silk shorts for women were sent to the most remote Russian villages.

It so happened that those shorts arrived in the co-operative stores at the same time as the tractors which were sent to the collective farms. Nobody knows who originated the idea, but somehow it was decided that these silk shorts were to go with the tractors; they became the uniform for the women who operated the tractors or collective farms wear only silk shorts, without any skirts at all, thus going far beyond all European and American skirt reductions and creating their own collective farm fashion.

We gasp to think what might happen to a shipload of Eugenie hats.—Boris Pilnyak in the Nation.

"Primitive Areas" for Parks

For the benefit of large numbers of people who crave the "back to nature" type of forest recreation, the forest service is establishing "primitive areas" in one of the national forest areas. The idea is to leave unimpaired unique natural values and give to the public so inclined an opportunity to experience conditions which existed in pioneer phases of the nation's development. Tourist parks filled with little cabins, facilities for cooking, running water, showers, etc., are a boon for the traveling, sight-seeing public, but there are thousands who will enjoy, appreciate and help conserve these "primitive areas" which will eventually form a part of all our national parks of sufficient area.

COBURN TOWN ENTER- TAINS BROTHERHOOD

Meeting of the Wittenberg Brotherhood held evening of March 9th at the Christian Church at Coburntown.

Meeting was called to order by the president, C. H. Fetter, who talked at some length of the inception of the organization and the principals in the formation of the brotherhood, its early beginnings and its experiences from that far distant time (twenty years ago) up through the years until the present time. This discourse was very interesting, especially to those who previously were not familiar with the society. Through it all Mr. Fetter has remained its president and by the older members of the brotherhood he is affectionately referred to as "The grand old man of the Wittenberg Brotherhood." His constant efforts have been rendered with the single purpose of promoting a more friendly attitude and better understanding among the members of DeKalb County. Those who are regular attendants of the monthly meetings can truthfully attest that his efforts have not been in vain. We respect and honor his fidelity in this movement.

Rev. Walter Coburn was then introduced by Karl Hart, who responded by scripture reading, comment and prayer.

The Coburntown quartette made up of Lehr Wilder, Walter Coburn, Karl Hart, and Mervin Place, assisted at the piano by Mrs. Mervin Place, rendered two vocal selections, followed by a vocal solo by Walter Coburn.

Our good friend Ora Blaker from Fort Wayne was then called upon and he graciously responded in his inimitable way with two piano solos, the first being a medley and the concluding number being an old Irish selection (Londonderry air).

Mr. Fetter again acting as chairman called upon Judge Endicott to introduce the speaker of the evening, Walter Helmke, formerly Prosecuting Attorney of Allen County, from Fort Wayne, who came in place of Mr. Gallemeier, Postmaster at Fort Wayne, who was ill and could not fill the engagement. Mr. Endicott, after a few well chosen remarks to his many friends in attendance called upon Mr. Helmke who gave a very splendid discourse on "Whither our Elders," referring again and again to the comparison of the adult members of society in comparison to the youth of the community of whom Mr. Gallemeier was to have talked had he been able to be present. Mr. Helmke gave a very creditable address and one that could well bear repeating many times. He gave some very fine injunctions to the youth of the land and again and again called upon the men of the nation as to their responsibility in business, in economics, financial as well as community and social life.

Following this Earl William Kinsey, a youth of St. Joe, responded with two readings in fine style and gusto. Two young men in attendance were then called upon, they being Mr. Jerry Barber and Mr. Luther Kinsey, who are hovering around the eighty year mark and they sang two songs, "Just As I Am" and "Whispering Hope" in splendid rhythm. Mr. Kinsey later gave two readings.

The following were then made members of the society: W. Lehr Wilder, Walter H. Coburn, Karl V. Hart and Floyd Coburn, of near St. Joe and Verne L. Sparks, of north of Auburn.

Rev. Myers, formerly of Butler, then sang a vocal solo playing his own accompaniment, after which the meeting was dismissed and all retired to the basement where the ladies of the Coburntown Church served a delicious chicken dinner.

The next meeting, April 13th to be held at the U. B. Church at Newville. The invitation was presented to the meeting and the membership voted to accept. A cordial invitation is extended to all. An interesting program will be arranged with dinner following the meeting.

TRI-TOWNSHIP 4-H CLUB NOTES

The week of March 21-26 is county wide 4-H Club week and during this time it is the aim of the County Agent, Vocational Teachers and their adult leaders to get the boys and girls enrolled in the various clubs that they may get a good start for the summer months and those following and that 1932 may be a banner year for club work.

In as much as we have not had any boys and girls in club work for a number of years in this community, I want to take this opportunity of bringing before the boys and girls as well as the Fathers and Mothers the aim and purpose of 4-H club work. It may be summed up under these five points:

1. To develop Initiative.
2. To develop Personality.
3. To develop Responsibility.
4. To develop Leadership.
5. To develop Appreciation for the Fine Arts.

There are many opportunities for club members to win scholarship awards, educational trips and other prizes, and the boys and girls of our community may be the recipient of some of these if we only give them the opportunity. Boys and girls from 10-21 years of age are eligible to membership.

The projects we are sponsoring in this community are as follows:

- Home Economics: 1. Leadership. 2. Clothing. 3. Baking.
- Agriculture: 1. Leadership. 2. Swine, (Barrow, gilt, litter). 3. Dairy calf. 4. Lamb, (fat, breeding). 5. Potato.

Fathers and Mothers talk 4-H club work over with your boy or girl so if they want to take one or two projects we can get their enrollment when we visit the schools in the near future. If there are any outside the schools who wish to enroll they are eligible and can do so by notifying the adult leader. In order to make club work a success we need the hearty cooperation of the parents as well as that of the boys and girls. Let's make our community one of the best in 4-H club work in DeKalb County.

Stanley Means,
Tri-Township Adult Club Leader

RED CROSS MAKES REPORT OF COUNTY WORK

During the month of February the Red Cross and County Nurse visited 42 schools including 66 rooms with 7 re-visits to class rooms, giving a rapid inspection including throat, teeth and eyes of 667 pupils and a thorough inspection of 247 children. Out of 217 with defective teeth 50 reported a visit to their dentist. The next greatest defect was found in the vision of the pupil, out of 62 of these referred to their physician for examination, five at present, have secured glasses. A few scattered cases of scarlet fever, many cases of colds, coughs and whooping cough were found by the nurse in the school or in the twenty homes visited, fifty health talks were given in class rooms, also a talk over the megaphone to the pupils of the Garrett High School. 172 slips were given to parents, eighty-eight talks to individual children, 20 sanitary inspections of school buildings and grounds, 50 health pamphlets distributed, thirty-seven business calls, thirty office interviews, fifteen office phone calls and ten individual letters written.

At the Teachers Institute the nurse spoke to the teachers in a body. Two health talks at St. Joe, one at the Parent-Teachers Association, another before the District Farmers Institute gave an opportunity to present the varied health problems and work of a county nurse.

Arrangements are under way to secure speakers for 6 or 7 cities or towns during May Day child health week from April 27 to May 2 and with teachers visited to plan health exercises with parents invited to attend.

YOU HAD IT—THE FLU?

The "flu bug" seems to be rampant and it has nearly wrecked the attendance of the public schools.

ceive immediate attention. If you have a cold in the head or sore throat, especially with fever, go to bed at once and call a physician.

To protect your family from influenza:

- Avoid crowded ill ventilated places.
- Dress warmly.
- Keep the feet dry.
- Eat simple and nourishing food.
- Avoid unnecessary exposure.
- Get plenty of rest.
- Sleep with plenty of fresh air.
- Do not get over-tired.

AMERICA CAME THROUGH!

In 1893 stark ruin stalked through the land. 467 banks failed in a few months. Mills, furnaces and factories shut down everywhere. Bankruptcy was on every hand. America had twice as many employed per thousand population as she has today. But she put them all back to work.

In 1907 panic broke loose. The production of pig iron dropped 50% in less than a year. All but the strongest men lost heart—"We are ruined," they declared. "Recovery cannot come in our time." Yet in two years prosperity had returned.

In 1921, when many honest and thoughtful people were predicting worse conditions, the country was already beginning to climb to the greatest era of prosperity it had ever experienced.

History tells how America has fought and won 19 major depressions. Good times, always follow hard times, as surely as day follows night. Prosperity always comes back. It is coming back this time, too.

Above all things, let us have faith.

"As the most nearly self-contained nation, we have within our own boundaries the elemental factors for recovery."

America Has Beaten 19 Major Depressions. She will Beat this one.

ACCIDENT TAKES 2 LIVES

Henry W. Krabill, Prominent in Real Estate Circles Instantly Killed

PHILIP RIGG, OF AUBURN

Dies At Auburn Hospital Short Time Following Crossing
Accident Friday

At 11 o'clock last Friday, the lives of two men, well known in DeKalb County, were snuffed out without warning, that of Henry W. Krabill, of St. Joe and Philip Rigg, of Auburn, when they drove in front of a north bound Wabash passenger train, at what is known as the Nimmons crossing, six miles north of St. Joe.

Mr. Krabill was killed instantly, while Mr. Rigg, died a short time after his arrival at the Souder hospital at Auburn.

Mr. Krabill and Mr. Rigg were engaged in a real estate partnership and were starting out on a drive to check up a few transactions that were pending. About ten minutes before the accident they left the home of Mrs. Elizabeth Kosht, where Mr. Krabill made his home, and started for Butler and just why they turned east at the Nimmons corner is not known, but possibly they had someone enroute to see. The train surely was in sight when they crossed the south crossing but not seeing it, turned east to just get on the track when the flyer came by.

The machine was completely demolished.

George Milliman and son, Merritt had talked to the men, just before starting on their trip, and made plans for the next day, when they were to investigate a deal together. By the time Millimans had reached St. Joe, a phone call came, telling of the tragedy.

Kinsey's ambulance was sent to Butler to get Mr. Krabill, while Mr. Rigg was taken to Auburn.

The bodies of both men were badly crushed. The car was owned by Mr. Rigg, and was a Ford coupe, which was carried a distance of about 400 feet north of the crossing.

Mr. Rigg had taken his son to school at Auburn and then drove to the Kosht home to join Mr. Krabill, for their day's journey.

Mr. Rigg had been particularly unfortunate the last eighteen months. He was injured in an onion field by stepping into a crevice in the ground caused by the long hot spell and he was taken to the Souder hospital with a ruptured bowel where he lay between life and death for weeks. Shortly after he was discharged from the hospital Mrs. Rigg died.

Mr. Rigg was 54 years of age. For a number of years he and his family lived in Auburn. He was well known throughout DeKalb county and for a time followed the vocation of auctioneer. He is survived by his daughter, Mrs. Henry Kessler, and son, Leroy.

For the past two or three years Mr. Krabill has been assisting in his farm work and lived with his sister, Mrs. Kosht, and handled his real estate work also.

He was born on a farm near St. Joe on March 29, 1867 and was the son of Abraham and Mary Saylor Krabill, and died at the age of 64 years, 11 months and 19 days. His father was born May 26, 1823 at Kirchheim, Greentown County, Rhein Bavaria, in Germany and emigrated to the United States in 1846, settling in Ohio, and later moving to Indiana. Henry was of a family of nine children, three remaining, Elizabeth A. Kosht and brother, Jacob F. Krabill, of near St. Joe, and Mrs. Kate M. Greenhock, of Colorado Springs, Colorado.

On September 9, 1891, Mr. Krabill was married to Dora L. Shilling, youngest daughter of Solomon and Esther Shilling, by the Rev. John J. Fred, and to this union three children were born, Paul F. R. Krabill, of Ohio; Agnes, who died June 15, 1912 at the age of 15 years, and Princess Beatrice Zonker. Besides his brother, two sisters and two children, he leaves five grandchildren, Walter Wayne Zonker, Jr., Christine Mary Zonker, Marilyn Agnes Zonker, Gloria Jane Zonker and Jacqueline Yvonne Zonker, he leaves a wide acquaintance of friends.

His wife, Dora L. Krabill, died July 28, 1920. Funeral services were held from the home of Mr. and Mrs. Zonker Sunday afternoon conducted by Rev. J. N. Scholes, with burial in Riverside cemetery. For many years Mr. Krabill taught school while living on a farm north of St. Joe, and after moving to St. Joe he engaged in the implement business for years.

LARGE INCOMES TAXED SIXTY-FIVE PERCENT

Tax Exempt Bond Amendment Sought

(Special to St. Joe News) Washington, D. C., Tuesday, March 22nd.—The House of Representatives has amended the Revenue Bill by increasing tax on large incomes of 65%. The tax was increased progressively on all taxable incomes. In supporting this amendment Congressman Hogg of Indiana, said, "The ability to pay is the true measure of taxation. A sales tax imposes a burden on the poor man, who does not have the ability to pay, whereas a heavy income tax placed the burden where it rightfully belongs. Besides, the accumulation of great fortunes is in itself a national evil. Inheritance and gift taxes on large fortunes must be materially increased." The argument was advanced that if great fortunes were taxed, they would be invested in non-taxable bonds. Mr. Hogg has had pending before the Ways and Means Committee for several years a proposal amendment to the Constitution remedying the evil of non-taxable bonds. He has placed a petition which requires 145 signers on the Speaker's desk, and it has rapidly been signed by Members of the House that the amendment may be acted upon by the House.

In addressing the Members on this issue Mr. Hogg said, "Our tax exempt system is a haven for great fortunes which pay no tax. It encourages extravagant spending and affords a Constitutional means to escape taxation. The weak should not be forced to bear the burden of the strong."

OBITUARY

Sarah Louisa, daughter of Moses and Maria Hilderbrand, was born in Concord Township, on a farm two miles west of St. Joe on October 26, 1863. There she grew to young womanhood. At an early age she united with the Methodist Protestant Church of Concord, during the ministry of Brother Lineberry. In March of 1887 she united with the Church of Christ at Coburn's Corners, under the ministry of J. A. Thomas, in which church she was a faithful worker and loyal follower of Jesus Christ until her death.

On November 27, 1887 she was married to Wilmot P. Coburn, whose home she gladdened with her presence for nearly forty-five years.

To this union were born six children: Floyd Coburn of Coburn's Corners; Ralph, deceased; Mrs. Laura Willard, of Marshalltown, Iowa; Walter, of Coburn's Corners; Mrs. Delphia Shaffer, of Pierceton, Indiana, and Kenneth still at home.

She passed away in the home in which she had lived her long married life on March 15, 1932, aged 68 years, 8 months and 11 days.

She leaves to mourn their loss besides her husband and children, three sisters: Mrs. Elizabeth Kaylor of Auburn, Indiana; Mrs. Laura Jane DeBow, of Goshen, Indiana, and Mrs. Clara Belle Wright, of White Pigeon, Michigan. Three sisters and one brother having preceded her in death. Also twelve grandchildren, several nieces and nephews, and many other relatives and many friends. The funeral was held from the Coburn's Corners Church Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock, conducted by Rev. J. O. Rose assisted by J. N. Scholes. Burial was made in the Alton cemetery by E. R. Kinsey.

Questions:

1. Why do we find ice slippery?
2. Why has a tiger stripes on his coat?
3. Has an elephant bone in his trunk?
4. How many bows in a rainbow?
5. What are raisins?
6. How long can a camel go without water?

Answers:

1. Because it melts under pressure of our weight and becomes wet. When it is very cold and ice is so hard it cannot melt, it is no more slippery than smooth pavements.
2. For protection. The stripes mingle in perfect harmony with the grasses and trees of the jungle so that his enemies cannot see him.
3. No. His trunk is made up of many, many muscles. Without it he would soon die for his large trunk prevent him from eating and drinking like other animals.
4. Two. An upper and a lower bow which is brighter and called the primary bow. In this bow the colors begin with red at the top and end with purple at the bottom. In the secondary or upper bow, the colors are just the reverse.
5. Dried grapes of various kinds. They used to be dried in Europe entirely but now California has a large raisin business.
6. At least four days, but sometimes longer.

VARIOUS GOOD THINGS

Planning three meals a day three hundred and sixty-five days a year, is no small task, yet one borne by millions of housewives. Then with the planning is the cooking and clearing away after each meal; even this is not so hard as the effort to keep within the budget as to expense of food, and serving wholesome meals with variety.

Not all women are born housekeepers and cooks, any more than all men are capable bank presidents or merchants; and there should be less expected from those who have different tastes as to their vocation. The average woman with the average mind can, with study, make a creditable housewife, but if her taste does not lean in that direction it is uphill work and she should be more often commended than condemned. Here are some suggestions for helping along the good work:

Baked Tomatoes.—Cut a thin slice from the stem end of ripe tomatoes and remove part of the pulp. Sprinkle the inside of the tomato with salt and add four tablespoons of chopped celery, one teaspoonful of paprika, one teaspoonful of onion, finely chopped, two tablespoons of grated cheese, three-fourths of a teaspoonful of salt and a dash of pepper, with the chopped pulp. Refill the tomatoes and place in a casserole. Bake in a moderate oven thirty minutes.

Shrimp and Celery Chowder.—Add two tablespoons of paprika to three cups of scalded milk, three-fourths of a teaspoonful of salt, two bouillon cubes, one cupful of diced celery, one cupful of water; cook together the last three. Then add the milk mixture, three-fourths of a cupful of potato cubes, one cupful of diced shrimps and three tablespoons of butter and a dash of cayenne. Serve hot.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

by WALTER TRUMBULL

At one of those annual luncheons to which members of the Dutch Treat club bring their children, one of the principal entertainers was Al Baker, the magician and ventriloquist. Mr. Baker was doing his ventriloquist act with a doll, but the actor who made the biggest hit with the grown persons in the audience was a little girl he induced to come up on the platform. She was about eight years old and she had no eyes for Mr. Baker. She looked only at the doll. The doll spoke to her and she answered gravely. Then the doll leaned over and whispered and she put her lips close to its ear and whispered back. Mr. Baker asked the child whether she would slug with the doll. She said she would.

"Perhaps she doesn't know my songs," said the doll.

"Oh, I think she does," said Mr. Baker, and he mentioned "Hush a Bye, Baby." The little girl said she knew that one, so she and the doll sang it together. She heard the doll speak with her own ears, and that was that. Even when she grows older, she probably never will forget that very remarkable doll.

They have told me another Henry Ford story. It seems that Mr. Ford has telephones pretty much all over his house, and makes a practice of using them. One day he read in a magazine an article which interested him and called up the editor. The magazine was published in Michigan.

"This is Henry Ford," he said. "I want you to send me two copies of your magazine," and he named the month. The editor was a smart fellow. He didn't know which of his friends was kidding him over the telephone, but he wasn't going to let him get away with it.

"Why only two copies, Henry?" he inquired. "If I had your money, I'd order 1,000 copies."

"Nevertheless," answered Mr. Ford, "I want only two copies, but I'd like them right away."

"O. K., Henry," said the editor. "I'll send them right around in a truck." Then he hung up the telephone, grinning a bit at his perspicacity.

A couple of days later the editor's telephone rang again. The same voice came over the wire, but this time it was considerably sharper.

"This is Henry Ford," it said. "I asked you to send me two copies of your magazine. They haven't arrived."

The editor began to have a queer feeling in the pit of his stomach. There was something about that voice which sounded real, and he was remembering a number of things he had said.

"Yes, sir," he stammered. "Sorry, sir," he mumbled. "I'll look it up, sir," he stammered.

Mr. Ford got his two magazines.

I was surprised to learn from Le-jaren A. Hiller, the artist, that he had been to the top of Katzmo, or the Enchanted Mesa, that great, circular rock which rises in solitary grandeur from a New Mexico plain. Comparatively few persons ever have climbed to the top of this rock. The first white man known to have scaled this mesa was Prof. William Libbey of Princeton. He accomplished the feat by means of a mortar from a life saving station, which he transported to the foot of the mesa and used to shoot a line over the top. This was in July, 1837. In September of that same year, Dr. Frederick Webb Hodge climbed the rock in three hours, by means of ladders and ropes.

John's Mother Praises Doctor

There isn't a mother living who won't agree that no half-sick child should be the subject for an experiment with medicines of uncertain merit. When your child is bilious, headachy, half-sick, feverish, restless, with coated tongue, bad breath, no appetite or energy, you know that nine times out of ten it's a sign his little stomach and bowels need purging. And when you know that for over fifty years leading physicians have endorsed one preparation for this condition, there doesn't seem to be any reason for "trying" things.

Rich, fruity California Fig Syrup clears the little stomach and bowels gently, harmlessly and in a hurry. It regulates the bowels, gives tone and strength to them and to the stomach; and helps to give your child new strength, energy and vitality. Thousands of Western mothers praise it. Mrs. Joseph W. Hill, 4306 Bedford Ave., Omaha, Nebraska, says: "I'll never forget the doctor who got me to give my baby boy, John, California Fig Syrup. Nothing else seemed to help his weak bowels. That was when he was just a baby. He suffered a good deal before I gave him Fig Syrup, but it stopped his trouble quick. I have used it with him for colds and little upset spells ever since. I consider him a Fig Syrup boy."

Insist on the genuine article. See that the carton bears the word "California." Over four million bottles used a year.

DAIRY

POINTS OF VALUE TO DAIRY FARMER

Owners Advised to Increase Their Herds.

"While we realize the value of milk as a food and know that there should be at least one cow for every five persons in the state, we should not overlook the opportunities provided in increasing the number of cows in all sections of the state," suggests John A. Arey, dairy extension specialist at the North Carolina State college. "In nearly every part of the state there is the opportunity to increase the number of cows so that the cream and milk may be sold. Farm dairying offers first a sure monthly cash income; second, profitable employment for farm labor throughout the year; third, a good market for home-grown feeds; fourth, a system of farming that will check erosion and build up the fertility of the land, and, fifth, cash returns from pasture land that would otherwise be idle."

These five points were also recommended by committees of farmers at the regional agricultural meetings which have been held in the state, says Mr. Arey. For a person to engage in the selling of cream or milk, he should have a unit of not less than five cows, for the expense of collecting either milk or cream from smaller herds is rather heavy.

To further develop the dairy industry, Mr. Arey says the committee recommended feeding liberally of a balanced ration made up almost entirely of home-grown feeds. Plenty of grazing in the form of permanent pasture and cover crops to last throughout the year where possible, was suggested. A good cow will need from 1,800 to 2,000 pounds of grain for one year.

Then, finally, good purebred dairy strees should be used to gradually build up the herd to a higher point of production and profit.

Wheat Inferior to Corn in Dairy Cows Ration?

Ground wheat does not appear to be as good as ground corn for feeding dairy cows. Experiments seem to indicate that wheat cannot replace corn pound for pound with equally good results from the standpoint of milk production. My own suggestion is that the wheat should not exceed 50 per cent of the grain ration and, better still, should not amount to more than 25 per cent. A grain mixture of half wheat and half corn would likely give you as good or better results than either wheat or corn alone. A grain mixture including bran is preferable. Two parts corn, 1 part wheat and 1 part bran would be a good mixture. Even such a mixture is likely to be low in protein and an even better formula would be to have 2 parts corn, 2 parts wheat, 1 part bran and 1 part cottonseed meal.—H. P. Davis, in the Nebraska Farmer.

Treatment for Garget

The way to handle garget is, first, to remove the diseased cow from the herd in order to prevent the spread of the disease to other animals. Milk diseased cows only after the other cows have been milked and milk the diseased quarter last. Do not milk on the floor. Milk in a utensil and throw it outside the barn at a spot where the cows cannot have access to it. Massaging the injured quarters helps. Amorphated oil or hot water can be used, although the rubbing is what does the most good. Milking affected quarters as often as possible, even as often as every three hours seems to help.

General treatment consists of reducing the feed perhaps to the extent of cutting out all grain for a day or two, and giving the animal a laxative, preferably from half to three-quarters of a pound of epsom salts.—American Agriculturist.

Beet Pulp for Dairy Cows

Most dairymen think it is necessary or at least desirable to soak beet pulp before feeding it to cows. Investigators at the United States dairy experiment station at Beltsville, Md., found that dry beet pulp gave as good results as the soaked beet pulp. In the experiment the cows were watered twice a day. The beet pulp when fed either wet or dry was mixed with the grain ration. The ration containing the dry beet pulp was fully as palatable as that containing the wet pulp. The cows when fed the dry pulp ate as much hay and gave as much milk as when fed the wet pulp. The gains in weight were a little greater when the cows received the wet pulp than when they were fed dry pulp.

Care Helps Also

In the winter season I find the cows do best when good care is added to a well mixed ration. I make certain that every cow in the herd has the ration on which she will give the most milk; but also see to it that they have plenty of water at the time they want it and are in every way comfortable. Worry over poor nutrition and cold stables and scant bedding requires energy that does not go into profits.—Arthur Frasier, in the Michigan Farmer.

Washington's Travels

Wakefield; a Restoration of the Birthplace of George Washington.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.)

GEORGE WASHINGTON, soldier-statesman, has eclipsed George Washington, the traveler—yet as a traveler, and as a geographer who gained his information at first hand, the Father of His Country earned the right to another "first."

Many places Washington visited have been aware of the fact; other places where he is reputed to have "stopped" or "spent the night" are far from the verified records of his travels. This information developed when the map makers of the National Geographic society started on the extensive research task—research consuming more than a year—to record all of Washington's journeys on a single map.

Thorough checks were made of the diaries of Washington, of the contemporary accounts of his travels, and in many cases personal visits had to be made to places, and musty courthouse files scanned, because of places that have changed names, or have their names duplicated.

The compilation of this information shows that George Washington traveled over a larger area than any other official of his time. His travels extended from the heart of Georgia to Kittery, Maine. Westward, he went to the vicinity of Lake Erie, in Pennsylvania, to the neighborhood of Point Pleasant, in West Virginia, and to Gallipoli, Ohio.

Of three sea voyages Washington made, one was to foreign soil, Barbados. But the most amazing aspect of his travels, perhaps, are his journeys on horseback—journeys ranging from Virginia to Fort Le Boeuf, and from Mount Vernon to Boston. However, so far as records show, he did not visit the birthplace of his mother, Eppig Forest.

Long Horseback Trips.

Washington's horseback trips were often arduous. He was known to average 85 miles a day for periods of more than a week. Once he rode 500 miles in 16 days. That trip was from Cumberland, Md., to Williamsburg, Va., and two days of the 16 were "time out" waiting for an armed escort. He carried the pay for Braddock's army in his saddlebags.

Horses often broke under the strain, when public duty called Washington to move with dispatch. For instance, when riding to join General Braddock, upon reaching the vicinity of what is now Charles Town, W. Va., he reported that he killed one horse outright and had rendered the three others he had brought along unfit for service.

When there was no urgency of public duty, his business was fared better. After his trip to his western lands in 1784, during which he had twice crossed the Appalachians and had been so far from civilization that he could get no corn for his horse (and nothing or only boiled corn for himself), he sets down with satisfaction that he had traveled 680 miles between the first day of September and the fourth day of October, on the same horses.

Washington's geographic instincts began to develop on this early trip. The trough of the south branch of the Potomac, where many years later President Grover Cleveland fished for bass, he described as "(a) couple of ledges of Mountain impassable running side and side together for above seven or eight miles and ye River down between them." He adds: "You must Ride Round ye back of ye Mountain for to get below them."

With boyish zest Washington ate his evening meal on Friday, April 8. "We camped this Night in ye Woods near a Wild Meadow where was a Stack of Hay after we had Pitched our Tent and made a very Large Fire we pulled out our Knapack in order to Roast ourselves every (one) was his own Cook our Spits was Perked Sticks our Plates was a Large Chip as-for Dishes we had none."

Good Pay, Small Expense.

A letter written to a friend while on one of the severe and arduous journeys he made to the waters of the Shenandoah, the Cacapon, and the South Branch in 1740, 1750, 1751, and 1752 indicates it was the good pay that reconciled young Washington to the hardships of a surveyor's life.

Therein he says that he had not slept above three or four nights in a bed, but after walking all day he lay down "before the fire upon a Little Hay Straw Fodder or bairskin which ever is to be had with Man Wife and Children like a parcel of Dogs or Cats and happy he that gets the Berth nearest the fire there's nothing would make

It pass of tolerably but a good Reward a Dubleloon ($7.19%) is my constant gain every Day. The Weather Will permit my going out and some time Six Pistoles ($21.50)."

Traveling expenses were low in those days. Virginia had a law that rates for accommodations in each county should be fixed by the court thereof, and that any keeper of an ordinary not observing these rates should be heavily fined, half the fine going to the informer. The Augusta county court order book shows that a hot dinner cost 9 pence; a cold meal, 6 pence; lodging, with clean sheets, 3½ pence; twenty-four-hour stabling and fodder for a horse, 6 pence; and corn or oats, per gallon, 6 pence. When it is remembered that the Virginia shilling was worth 16½ cents of our money, we see that a hot dinner cost 12½ cents and other service in proportion.

From Staunton, Washington rode to Fredericksburg by way of Charlottesville, making the 114-mile journey in three days and still being fit enough to play billiards the evening he arrived.

On Wednesday, February 4, 1750, Washington set out for Boston to lay a case of military precedence before Gen. William Shirley, commander in chief of the British forces in America. He reached Philadelphia the following Sunday, and took five or six days to look around the city.

He apparently made the 90 intervening miles to New York in two days. And what must the New York of that day have meant to the young Virginian, who had spent the last three years mostly in the primeval forests or fighting French and Indians on the savage frontiers!

A Visit to New York.

There was the "Microcosm" to visit described at the time as a world in miniature, which took 22 years to build. Washington's enthusiasm for it is written in his accounts, for on two separate occasions he enters items "for treat. Ladies to ye Microcosm." There was also a rout at Mrs. Bayne's and tips to the servants in the household of Beverly Robinson, son of the speaker of the Virginia house of burgesses. The young officer was always punctilious in tipping the servants in households where he was entertained, and equally so in entering these items in his account books—two traits that have aided a great deal in tracing his travels.

Two days before he was twenty-four years old he set out on the last leg of his journey to Boston, and the "Pennsylvania Gazette" carried the news that "Colonel Washington, of Virginia, but last from Philadelphia, left this city (New York) for Boston."

On his way to Boston he stopped with a Mr. Malbone, in Rhode Island. He entered a tip for the latter's servants of 44 and another item of 45 for a broken bowl.

In Boston he stopped at Cromwell's Head tavern. He saw General Shirley, who dealt the question of command at Fort Cumberland in his favor; lost some money at cards at the governor's house, and then set off for Virginia. But at the governor's he had met such people as John Adams, and made a deep impression by his recital of conditions in western Virginia, Maryland and Pennsylvania. Unconsciously he again was playing into the hands of destiny, for John Adams was one of those who 19 years later joined with Thomas Johnson of Maryland in making him commander in chief of the American forces.

Survey of the Frontier.

Another interesting phase of Washington's travels began when he determined to make a personal survey of the frontier with a view to establishing a chain of forts at the important passes, in the hope of damming the Indian tribe behind the Allegheny divide.

During the French and Indian war days, village and towns near the frontier had not yet begun to take shape, except in the case of county seats. Places were known as "John Smith's Plantation," "William Scott's Mill," "Tucker's Fort," "Big Lick," etc. The changing ownership of the generations, together with the substitution of bridges for fords, have obliterated these names from map and memory alike.

It was necessary, therefore, to go patiently through scores of massive land-grant books, dozens of old deeds books, and all the survey records that have survived, in order to find out where the early settlers lived.

"SICK HEADACHE?"

It is not necessary to give-in to headaches. It is just a bit old-fashioned! The modern woman who feels a headache coming on at any time, takes some tablets of Bayer Aspirin and heads it off.

Keep Bayer Aspirin handy, and keep your engagements. Headaches, systemic pains, come at inconvenient times. So do colds. You can end them before they're fairly started if you'll only remember this handy, harmless form of relief. Carry it in your purse and insure your comfort while shopping; your evening's pleasure at the theatre. Those little nagging aches that bring a case of "nerves" by day are ended in a jiffy. Pains that once kept people home are forgotten half an hour after taking Bayer Aspirin! You'll find these tablets always help. If you get real aspirin, you'll get real relief. In every package of genuine Bayer tablets are proven directions which cover headaches, colds, sore throat, toothache, neuralgia, neuritis, sciatica, rheumatism, etc.

The tablets stamped Bayer won't fail you, and can't harm you. They don't depress the heart. They don't upset the stomach. So take them whenever you need them, and take enough to end the pain.

Prized Gray Hairs Went Into Discard

A young advertising man has long been handicapped by the fact that, while young, he is not nearly so young as he looks. His youthfulness of appearance has often caused persons in authority—such as traffic policemen—to treat him with a degree of condescension rather painfully noticeable. His office boy, whose appearance is one of slightly premature maturity, is everywhere treated by subway guards, box office employees and garage attendants with infinitely more respect than he ever can achieve.

This persistent youthfulness has worried him, mildly, for ten years or more. It was, therefore, with something near real pleasure that he welcomed the first gray hairs. He envisioned himself as, at long length, attaining the dignity of appearance he had come to covet—partly because so many people absent-mindedly addressed him as "boy." The gray came along nicely. It spread along the sides of his head. He approached maturity. Then his wife, embarking on one of her periodical campaigns to smarten him up, insisted that he keep his hair cut shorter. He explained the need to the barber.

He emerged from the shop pleased with the idea that he now looked like an alert young executive. He dropped in at a soda fountain and sat waiting the busy dispenser. Finally the dispenser, a lad of about twenty, turned to him.

"And what to yours, young man?" he inquired.

"NO rage like love to hatred turned," has its converse in the experience that no passion is more enduring than that of a hatred which grows into love. It is as though the small seed of affection finds nurture and strength in the opposed and more wasting forces. A case in point is illustrated with tensely dramatic interest in this unusual story—a romance of hearts throbbing to contrary emotions, but which, by gradual and insensible processes, are brought into perfect unison.

Flowers Ever in Men's Minds at Eastertide

Easter is the oldest festival known to mankind. It was instituted by Nature, herself, and was originally celebrated in honor of the spring. Primitive man could not fathom the spring miracle, but he could appreciate it, and celebrate this joyous "Festival of breaking bud and scented breath."

Every nation had its own name and legend for spring—the resurrection of life. Each year, when Nature lived and blossomed anew, the tender beauty of the flowers stirred the human mind to wonder and deep speculation. Literature is rich in beautiful legends of the flowers, which tradition says first bloomed in Heaven.

When the evil angels were driven from Heaven they snatched their arms full of flowers and carried them away. But God would not permit his celestial blossoms to be taken to Hades, so he caused the wicked angels to become tired, and, one by one, they dropped the flowers over the earth before they reached their destination. Another old legend which accounts for the beginning of the flowers states that Venus sprinkled nectar into the blood of the wounded Adonis and flowers sprang up. The word flower itself comes from Flora, goddess of flowers.

ALTHOUGH the flowers were originally connected with pagan customs and beliefs, most of them are now closely woven, by Christian traditions, to the event of the resurrection of Christ.

In all ages and lands the white lily has been closely associated with the two greatest mysteries of human life—birth and death. Juno, the queen of the Roman gods, chose the lily as her symbol, and the classics tell us of feasts given among the lilies. Joan of Arc was crowned with white lilies to typify the purity and sacredness of her mission.

The first lily used as a symbol of the resurrection was the Madonna, or Annunciation lily in their pictures of saints, angels and the Madonna. In the Madonna pictures there are frequently three lilies on a stem to represent the Trinity, or the annunciation, conception and birth of the Savior. A pot of these lilies over doors and windows is symbolical of the Virgin in ecclesiastical art and architecture, but lily pillars, or columns, typify the resurrection.

IN MODERN times the Easter lily has taken the place of the Madonna lily both in America and Europe, because it is a harder plant. The Easter lily, or Bermuda lily, was originally a native of Japan. More than 200 years ago a pirate sea captain brought some of the bulbs to Bermuda, where it grew larger and more beautiful than in the Orient. It became known as the Bermuda lily, and for generations its care and cultivation were handed down from father to son, until it became one of the household gods of the island planter. Until very recent years America was entirely dependent upon China, Japan and Bermuda for bulbs of the Easter lily, but through painstaking experiments the United States government has learned to produce our own bulb supply.

Not only the Christians, but all other religions of the world have used the lily to typify consolation and hope. The lotus lily is sacred to the Buddhists, and to it they dedicate ceaseless prayers which are printed on parchment and fastened to constantly revolving cylinders in the great temples of Tibet. From Egypt to China superstitions and great love abounds for the sacred lotus. Tradition also relates that Judith, the Israelite heroine of the Apocrypha, wore a crown of lotus lilies when she went upon her mission to destroy Holofernes. And all the world knows that Cleopatra wore lotus blossoms in her hair.

THERE is a legend old as Christianity, which says that the Virgin spilled a few drops of her milk on the ground, and from these drops sprang the dainty little lily of the valley, those "fairly bells that bring incense to the spring." But in some of the old English country villages this precious little flower is called the "Ladder of Heaven." The ancient Druids believed that it symbolized future happiness, and they used it at weddings to insure wedded bliss to the bride and bridegroom. In the old days all marriages were celebrated in the spring. Few modern brides realize that they follow an ancient pagan custom when they carry a bridal bouquet of lilies of the valley.

In the days of dim antiquity all flowers were divided into two general classes. The bell-shaped blossoms were called lilies and all the others were roses. This is said to account for some flowers being called roses which do not belong to our present rose family. The rose of Jericho is one of these. It is not a rose at all, but a sort of vegetable. This plant is sometimes used as a symbol of the resurrection because it is usually found in a shriveled, dried-up condition, but it is immediately revived or resurrected by a little moisture. However, the rose of Jericho is more commonly called the rose of Mary because tradition says that it grew to mark every resting place of the Holy Family during the journey to Egypt.

ANOTHER flower of the Easter season, the primrose, is likewise not a rose. Its old generic name is primula—or first—and since it was not bell-shaped it was called a rose. This flower blooms so early that it has become the symbolical flower of the month of January.

Primroses, the spring may love them, But knows but little of them.

The briar-rose, according to ancient Christian tradition, grew from the drops of blood that fell to the earth from the Savior's brow when it was pierced by the crown of thorns on the cross. But there is another legend which says that Christ's crown of thorns was made of the white briar-rose itself, and the red rose sprang from these blood-stained roses.

Men pierced his brow with thorns, but Angels stanch his blood with roses.

To this day the faithful in some parts of Russia will never suffer a red rose to lie on the ground. The red rose is usually considered an emblem of the crucifixion, but the white rose belongs to Mary. She dried her mourning veil on a rose bush and the bush bore white roses ever after.

CUPID gave Hippocrates, the god of silence, a rose, and that flower has since become the symbol of silence. When the Greeks wished the conversations at their feast tables to be kept secret a freshly-gathered rose was hung from the ceiling just above the head of the table. It was considered dishonorable and even criminal to reveal anything said "sub rosa" (under the rose). But the mythical blue rose is symbolic of heavenly bliss and unattainable earthly ideals. The passion flower got its name from the fancied resemblance of certain parts of the flower to the instruments of the crucifixion. It is also a symbol of faith. The evil mandrake which is found in southern Europe, North Africa and Asia Minor is also bound by tradition to Easter. Only at Eastertide does the devil lose his power over this herb.—Washington Star.

Easter Day

"Welcome, happy morning!" age to age shall say,
Earth her joy confesses, clothing her for spring,
All fresh gifts returned with her returning Kings:
Bloom in every meadow, leaves on every bough,
Speak his sorrow ended, hail his triumph now.
Hell today is vanquished, heaven is won today.
—From an old Latin Poem.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Member of Faculty, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)
(© 1932, Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for March 27
JESUS RISES FROM THE DEAD

LESSON TEXT—John 20:1-29.
GOLDEN TEXT—But now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first fruits of them that slept.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Jesus Living Again.
JUNIOR TOPIC—Jesus the Conqueror.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Loving and Serving the Risen Lord.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Fact and Meaning of the Resurrection.

I. The Empty Tomb (vv. 1-10).
John does not enter into a description of the resurrection of Christ or give any proof other than that the tomb was empty, and that Jesus had repeatedly manifested himself after the tomb was found empty. To see the body of Christ with a spear-thrust and nail prints and the empty tomb was all that faith needed.

1. The testimony of Mary Magdalene (vv. 1, 2). This woman, out of whom Jesus had cast seven demons (Mark 16:9; Luke 8:2), announced the fact of the empty tomb to Peter and John. Prompted by great love to him for his kindness to her, she went early to the tomb even "when it was yet dark."

2. Personal Investigation by Peter and John (vv. 3-10). The news of the empty tomb which Mary brought with breathless haste so moved John and Peter that they both ran to investigate. When John came to the empty tomb, he gazed into it, but when Peter came he entered it. This investigation convinced them of the reality of the resurrection. The removal of the stone from the sepulchre, the arrangement of the grave clothes, convinced them that the enemy could not have done this.

II. The Manifestations of the Risen Lord (vv. 11-29).

1. To Mary Magdalene (vv. 11-18).

a. Mary weeping at the empty tomb (v. 11). Peter and John went home, but Mary could not. She stood weeping. Home was nothing to her while her Lord was missing. Earnest love need not weep long for Jesus is found of those who love him. She should have been rejoicing that the grave was empty, for the empty tomb was eloquent proof of his messianicship and deity.

b. Mary questioned by the angels (vv. 12, 13). Through her tears, she saw angels at the tomb, who inquired as to the cause of her sorrow.

c. Jesus revealed himself to Mary (vv. 14-16). She first saw the angels and then her eyes lighted upon the Lord. She did not recognize him in his resurrection body, but his voice was familiar to her. As soon as he called her by name, she recognized him and fell at his feet weeping.

d. Jesus forbade her to touch him (v. 17). This showed that she was coming into a new relationship to him.

e. Mary's testimony (v. 18). She told the disciples that she had seen the Lord.

2. To the disciples (vv. 19-20). He appeared to several of his disciples at different times during the day. This is the first appearance to the disciples as a body. The rumors of his several appearances on that day caused the disciples to assemble to talk over the matter. Fear of the Jews, they met in a private room and barred the door. While they were discussing the strange happenings of the day, the Lord mysteriously appeared to them.

a. When Thomas was absent (vv. 19-23).

(1) His message of peace (v. 19). This revealed his attitude toward them. He did not come with censure for their failure and desertion.

(2) He showed his hands and his side (v. 20). Having calmed their fears, he gave them unmistakable evidence of his resurrection.

(3) He commissioned them (v. 21). "As my Father hath sent me even so send I you." This commission was not simply to preach, as the eleven, but to all Christians (Luke 24:33).

(4) He bestowed the Holy Spirit upon them (v. 22). This was their equipment. Only as empowered by the Holy Ghost can one go forward as a successful witness for Christ.

(5) The disciples' authority (v. 23). This authority was not by virtue of office, but by having the Holy Ghost. This spiritual gift gave spiritual discernment to know who had or who had not repented and consequently to pronounce pardon or withhold it.

b. When Thomas was present (vv. 24-29).

(1) The victory of sight and touch (vv. 24-26). The Lord graciously supplied the evidence which Thomas needed. The Lord does not rebuke those who sincerely seek light.

(2) Greater blessing for those who believe, not having seen (v. 29).

Money to Burn

By Peter B. Kyne

CHAPTER XIV—Continued

"You're an even dirtier little rat than I gave you credit for being. So unless I give you ninety thousand dollars you will put the experts from the internal revenue department on the trail of the estate, and they'll collect so much taxes illegally withheld—"

"They'll find the estate—you know they will," Bunker screamed. "They can't do anything to your uncle, but they can find his estate up to one hundred per cent. They won't have any pity on you."

"You forget that you are an accessory before the fact. In the eyes of the law you have committed a felony by aiding and abetting my uncle to defraud the government."

"I know. But when I turn state's evidence they won't do anything to me," Bunker laughed mirthlessly. "That's what immunity baths are for. They pay me for my information."

"Bunker, you're loathsome. Get out of my room. Quick! I don't like to roughhouse a little old man like you, but if you're still standing there looking triumphantly at me thirty seconds from now I'll manhandle you. Scat, you polack!"

Following Bunker's unceremonious departure, Elmer Clarke sat down to do some solid thinking. He had need to, for Bunker's threat seemed not to prove to be an idle one. He was able to find himself in a most unenviable position.

"Well, one thing is certain," he decided. "If the collector of internal revenue, egged on by Bunker, should levy on the total real estate of the estate, I'll be back, financially, where I was before Uncle Hiram died, but with this exception—I'll be out of a job. Well, I'll soon find another. My health is A-one again, so what the devil do I care for the slings and arrows of outrageous fortune, provided I do not have to wait too long to marry Nellie?"

"Why, I almost forgot that I am mayor. I have got a job, after all, and it pays me one hundred dollars a month. Well, I've existed on less. Elmer, old settler, you're not licked at all."

He decided to await developments. It occurred to him that if Bunker really had such a club to swing he would have swung it most profitably on Uncle Hiram before the latter departed for that mysterious land where income taxes are not. He certainly would not swing it until he had collected his own legacy from the estate, for Bunker was too cunning to make such a maladroit move. Perhaps his threat had been a monumental bluff.

"I think this is a matter I should take up with McPeake," he decided, and forthwith called upon the lawyer. McPeake listened to the incredible tale with a growing disgust manifesting itself on his features.

"You're a shrewd judge of human nature, Mr. Clarke," he declared when Elmer had finished his recital. "Bunker is a rat. I am positive, however, that he is bluffing you. If he had had such a weapon to use on your uncle, he would have used it. Consequently, I think that the best thing to do is to ignore him and proceed with the distribution of the estate."

"Well, I'll not accept any money that doesn't belong to me, Mr. McPeake."

"That's all very fine, but wait until you know for a certainty that it doesn't belong to you. I have no apprehensions on the matter, Mr. Clarke. Remember, Bunker is an arrant coward."

"Well, perhaps you're right, but I don't think he has the courage to bluff. I confess I'm afraid of him."

"Well, I'm not, and the first day he comes in here I'll have him by the collar and shake him down. I'll write you the results of my inquisition."

So Elmer went on to New York. Five weeks later McPeake wrote him that the real estate had been sold, that all of the debts of the estate had been paid and that a final decree of distribution had been signed by the judge of the probate court. McPeake added that Elmer's share of the estate would amount to approximately $218,000.

Immediately upon receipt of this information Elmer came on to Muscatine and the day after his arrival he was to meet McPeake in the latter's office.

"Not a pop out of our friend Bunker," he announced, coming at once to the subject closest to Elmer's heart. "I had him in my office and gave him a bad hair, but could not get any admission from him. He talked vaguely of things he could do, but seemed disinclined to do them. I think he was bluffing."

"Has he received his legacy, Mr. McPeake?"

"I handed him his check ten minutes ago. Thought I might as well get rid of him before you arrived." McPeake reached into his desk and drew out a formal typewritten receipt with a check for $218,734.22 attached to it. "Sign here," he ordered—and Elmer signed and pocketed his check.

Then he gathered up all of the papers and took his departure. The check he had received was on the First National bank, downtown, so Elmer went into the bank first and approached the paying teller's window. "I wish you'd have this check cashed," he said, and handed it through the teller's window.

The paying teller took it and departed. Five minutes later he returned and handed the check back to Elmer uncashed. "Sorry," he said, "but a distraint warrant has been served on the bank by the local collector of internal revenue, and we are debarred from honoring any further checks on this account."

"I thank you," said Elmer politely and walked out. Up to McPeake's office he went. The client the latter had been expecting had not yet arrived and Elmer went at once into the lawyer's private office.

"Well, Bunker has made good," he announced. "I told you I thought he wasn't bluffing. He planned his coup so cleverly that he got his own check, rushed downtown and cashed it just before the collector of internal revenue served warrant on the bank. The funds of the estate are all tied up under the books."

"Holy Jumper-up Jehonaphat!" yelled Absolom McPeake. "No!"

"But yes!"

"Do not believe it!"

"No downtown and ask the paying teller of the First National bank. He'll enlighten you. I went down there and he enlightened me."

"The dirty dog!" McPeake raved. "The dirty little snake in the grass to do a thing like this!"

Elmer shrugged. "All I'm hoping is that the collector of internal revenue leaves me enough to pay my few debts. I owe the Pilgrimage Commercial Trust and Savings bank twenty thousand. If I get that much out of the wreck I'll be back where I started and in a month or two I'll be just as happy as if I had never been a millionaire."

"You are game," McPeake declared admiringly, and called for his secretary. "Get the collector of internal revenue on the line for me," he ordered.

Thereafter for five minutes he listened on the line while the collector of internal revenue talked. Silently McPeake hung up.

"Licked!" he croaked. "Licked to a frazzle!"

"All right, I'm licked," Elmer retorted calmly. "What interests me is to know how I was licked."

"Bunker went to the collector of internal revenue directly after you gave him your ultimatum and turned the real set of books and vouchers over to them, and for five weeks a corps of expert accountants has been experting them. The status of limitations has run against the income tax returns for 1913, 1914, 1915, 1916 and 1917, but they have you nailed on the returns from then on. They have made up the tax returns for those years as they should have been made up had your uncle made an honest return, and the collector informs me that the estate owes the government two hundred and thirty-one thousand, nine hundred and four dollars and eight cents."

They looked at each other, and presently the slow, amused smile crept around Elmer's mouth. "Mac," he asked, "did you get your fee out of the estate before the crash?"

McPeake shook his head wearily.

"Then the joke's on you," Elmer declared, and stood up. "Tell you what you do," he continued. "You get hold of that collector, run down his accounting and, when you are convinced he is right and we haven't got a leg to stand on, you settle with him on the best basis you can."

"As for me, I'm out. I have neither the time nor the inclination to fight for anything except a living, and the longer I delay that assault the worse off I'll be. I'm about eight months behind the procession now and I'll have to hurry to catch up." He held out his hand. "Good-by, Mac, I'm on my way."

"Elmer, I'm terribly sorry," McPeake, friendliest of men, was calling him by his first name.

"Don't waste your sympathy, Mac. I'm one bird in this world who hates sympathy. I've never been able to use any. Uncle Hiram's money would have meant a great deal to the happiness of that girl I told you about, and for her sake I wish Bunker had never been born. But why reprove? When the collector of internal revenue proves his case, hand him this with my compliments," and Elmer laid on McPeake's desk the check the latter had so recently handed him. He held out his hand. "Good-by, Mac. Hope you get yours. You've worked for it—which is more than I did. You might write to me from time to time and tell me how you're coming along."

He shook hands and departed.

Back at his hotel, he packed his trunk and suitcase, telephoned downstairs for his bill and then lay down on his bed to wait for train time. At four o'clock he was homeward bound and three days later he dropped off the Del Monte Flyer at Pilgrimage and made his way on foot up to his home.

He was greeted enthusiastically by Emily, his old hunting dog, and his colored retainer, Jasper. To the latter he handed the wages due him to date. "I'll not need you any more, Jasper," he announced. "I'm sorry. You're a good servant and faithful, but I can't afford you. I'll dine uptown tonight."

He left the amazed and disappointed Jasper staring after him, went to the telephone and called up Nellie at the bank.

"Elmer speaking. Nellie, I'm home—back home and broke. I'd like to take you out to dinner tonight—probably for the last time—and tell you all about it. Uncle Hiram's estate has melted like a dish of ice cream on a hot stove. You must take you'll ever listen to Nellie. Brace yourself for a laugh."

"Oh, Elmer dear! I'm so sorry!" Nellie's voice was pregnant with tears.

"Don't," he pleaded. "Please do not feel sorry for me, Nellie. Time enough for that when I begin feeling sorry for myself. I've assimilated the grandest thrashing any man ever assimilated, and I can still stand and see and here, Elmer Clarke. I'm going to cry."

Elmer hurriedly paid his bill and they left the roadhouse. Five miles down the road they came to the first light on the outskirts of Pilgrimage. Nellie laid her soft little hand on Elmer's arm.

"Pull up under that are light," she commanded, and Elmer obeyed. From her bag Nellie drew a sheaf of typewritten papers and handed them to Elmer. "Read," she commanded.

"What is it, Nellie?"

"It's the final accounting of your Uncle Hiram's estate submitted to the court by the executor, Absolom McPeake. You didn't take time to read it when he submitted a copy to you, so he sent it on to me to show you."

"How do you—why—didn't know he gave you?"

"Read it, booby!" Nellie cried. "You're so deliberate you drive me crazy. Read it."

So Elmer read it—and when he had done so he was aware that he was riding in an automobile with the next of kin of Benedict Catheron, who had received by the estate of Hiram Butterworth the sum of $1,078,000 in full satisfaction of that certain mortgage, of cetera. His face was very long and solemn as he folded the document and returned it to her.

"I'm happy you happened to be Benedict Catheron's granddaughter, Nellie," he said quietly. "You deserve every cent of it. God bless you! I hope you'll conserve it and enjoy it and never know the pinch of poverty again as long as you live."

"I told you I wouldn't wait to marry you until you had become fat and middle-aged and accumulated a few thousand dollars, Elmer. I meant what I said. Oh, my dear, I knew it all the time—I saw how little you were going to have left after everything should have been paid—and when I discovered, through McPeake, that you would escape with two hundred and eighteen thousand dollars I had a great curiosity to see how you would stand looking at that. So I told McPeake I wanted you to think—oh, please forgive me, darling, but old Bunker was bluffing you all the time! So Mr. McPeake fixed it with the bank to tell you that story and then he pretended to have a long conversation with the collector of internal revenue—and here's your two hundred and eighteen thousand dollars and some odd Elmer—and oh, you're so brave and simple and unspooled, and I love you so much more now that I know how truly fine you are—kiss me, booby, kiss me, I say! Take me in your arms and tell me you love me. I want to hear you say it—over and over again, darling—and say you forgive me. I've bought out old you for good."

"I'll talk that matter over before we decide," she retorted. "Pick me up at the house at seven o'clock."

At seven o'clock Elmer called for Nellie and drove her out to Joe Angelotti's roadhouse for dinner. And there, between the soup and the nuts, he told her the tale of his ranching million. When the story was done Nellie poked the tablecloth with the tines of her fork and was silent for about a minute. Then:

"What are you going to do, Elmer?"

"Anything at all that I can find to do, Nellie."

"But you're the mayor of Pilgrimage now—you're a trustee of the Union high school. Are you going to resign and leave Pilgrimage?"

"Not if I can make a decent living here. To resign and leave now would be equivalent to running away."

"But you'll be laughed to death, Elmer. Oh, you haven't any idea how cruelly you'll be laughed by the townspeople! I'll hurt terribly. I wouldn't blame you for leaving the town."

"I know. But I've stood some hurts in my day and I can stand more."

Nellie looked up at him with love unutterable in her brown eyes. "I adore you," she whispered.

Her simple, heartfelt declaration brought a smile to his eyes. "Please don't say it, Nellie," he pleaded. "I love you more than I'll ever love any woman again, but—understand, don't you darling? I can't expect you to marry a pauper. I'll probably be a fat, middle-aged man before I'll have enough money to support you decently—and—oh, please, understand, Nellie! I want you so, but I'll not be selfish enough to ask you to wait."

"I understand thoroughly, dear. I do not expect you to ask me to wait and as a matter of fact I would not consent to wait. When I marry you I want some of the sweetness of life, not the sacrifice and the drudgery of never-ending poverty. I have my place in the bank and I—take me out of

Elmer hurriedly paid his bill and they left the roadhouse. Five miles down the road they came to the first light on the outskirts of Pilgrimage. Nellie laid her soft little hand on Elmer's arm.

Maronites Largest of Lebanon's Many Cults

Biblical Lebanon, Asia's only Christian state and the smallest one in the world, has seven different confessions among its 525,019 inhabitants, according to the last census. Despite mass emigration among people of different faiths, Christians again maintain their majority. The largest group is the Maronites with 214,313 adherents. In addition there are 30,445 emigrants of this faith in the United States who still pay taxes to the homeland. They form one of the oldest Christian churches. Its history goes back as far as the fourth century, retaining Aramaic as the church language. Since the Middle Ages, the Maronites have recognized the pope, although they have a patriarch of their own. There are only 5,421 Protestants in the Lebanese republic. The ancient churches such as the Syrian Jacobite and the Assyro-Chaldean claim the majority of 11,000 church-goers classed among the minorities. Next to the Maronites are the Sunnite Moslems with 126,040 and the Shittites with 113,530.

WITH OUR CLUB LADIES

CULTURE CLUB

The Ladies of the Culture Club were entertained at the home of Roy Smith, Wednesday evening, March sixteen.

After a short business session, conducted by the president, Lena Mack, the program committee, Grace Sheffer, Blanch Leighty, Hilda Reasoner and Lula Shuff, assisted by the hostess, took charge.

"Shure, and we're after a thinking o'ld St. Patrick, his fairies and all their blarney must have been their inspiration for the panorama of riotous entertainment that followed."

The committee dressed in white, wearing white head bands decorated with green shamrocks and on their backs trailing a long green sash, met each guest and pinned on them a tiny green snake.

The hostess then gave a reading, "The Origin of St. Patrick," followed by two Irish songs "My Wild Irish Rose" and "I Am Irish," sung by the committee, assisted by Grace Sheffer and the Harmonica.

Following this was a potato ring contest—the judges decided that, while one side was the speedier, the other was the neater, so they awarded all the contestants with a line "dum-dum."

The guests were then transformed by the Irish fairies into pigs and were classified according to type and breed, and then with the true Irish spirit the "porkers" and committee ended this game with an old fashioned folk dance.

The next hour was spent in playing Bunco. Prizes were won by Kate Bowser and Edith Sailer. The guests then were requested to go upstairs where a game of "Blarney" was conducted by Lula Shuff. This game afforded some rivetification and much merriment.

The committee then ushered the ladies to the dining room and seated them at beautifully and appropriately appointed tables.

The hostess, assisted by the committee, then served a dainty two course lunch consisting of first course: chicken sandwiches, shamrock salad, potato chips and Irish pipes. Second course: Angel food cake, ice cream, coffee. Upon departing the guests with-out any "Blarney" extended their thanks and appreciation to the hostess and the committee.

NEWVILLE TOWNSHIP HOME BUREAU

The Newville Township Home Bureau met at the home of the president, Mrs. Blen Moore for an all day meeting. A pot-luck dinner with ice cream was served at noon. Roll call was responded to with Irish jokes. Mrs. Lena Pierman and Mrs. Mammie Gintner were elected Project Leaders for the year. Mrs. Daisy Roberts and Mrs. Millie Enzor reported on the work given at Auburn by Miss Martin on Synthetic material. Mrs. Blen Moore gave a very interesting talk on care of baby chicks, which was followed by a general discussion. The next meeting will be April 13th at the home of Mrs. Almira Conline.

HOME BUREAU

The March meeting of the Home Bureau was held at the gym with Mrs. Hattie Johnson and Mrs. Beulah Coburn as hostesses. A committee of five ladies was appointed to meet with the finance committee to complete arrangements for the raising of funds to be used in the near future. The ladies meeting Monday night with Mrs. Hazel Baltz. The project leader, Mrs. Grace Sheffer gave a very interesting report showing some lovely scarfs made at the project leaders meeting held at Auburn. The ladies responded to roll call with Mother Goose rhymes. A pantomime, "A day on the farm" with Mrs. Grace Sheffer as reader and Mrs. Arline Koch as director, was well given by seven ladies. The club will meet April 15 with Mrs. Vada Wyatt. The hostess served brick popcorn.

HABIT IN A BOY'S LIFE

Habit is the great stabilizing force in life. An act performed, a thought entertained, a desire encouraged—tends to become permanent. A few repetitions reduce the resistance at the branched nerve endings through the nervous system and a habit "is in the saddle."

Habit is a tyrant or habit is a fool—whichever one permits. While habit may drag one downward to despair it may lift one upward to larger life.

Scouting is fundamentally a program of habit building. It teaches citizenship by active living, leadership by leading, life by living, and thoroughness through the daily acts of scouting.

The Scoutmaster is therefore urged to consider habit not as a tyrant which negligence soon makes it, but as a constructive tool awaiting his use. He and the Scout as well must remember that habits are built; that new ones replace old ones, almost unconsciously if the new ones are made more attractive; that old habits die with strange speed if they are made to cause the lad discomfort. Indeed the whole troop or patrol can by its approval or disapproval very effectively awaken or smother almost any habit unless that habit has strong moral sanctions back of it.

There are three forces that determine human growth and achievement:

Heredity—which provides the raw materials of life.
Environment—which evokes and modifies the original nature of the individual.

Conscious Control—which, within limits, by sheer force of will can stay the full sway of either.

The heredity of the boy is a heritage which accompanies him into life. It is a fixed influence limiting the boy's possibilities. The Scoutmaster cannot change it.

The environment of a boy, however, can be modified. The Home, the School, the Church, the Community, the Playground, the Street, the Alley, the "Movie," the Work, the Play, the Recognition, the Encouragement, all these blend to form the boy's environment. It conditions the development of natural tendencies—encouraging or repressing them. Indeed it may cause the emergence of seemingly new habits which become fixed through exercise. Here the Scoutmaster may profoundly influence the boy's whole life—the boy's habits are the key to his character. While environment influences the boy's habits most deeply, it is imperative for adults to consistently consider that the boy forms his own habits. Adult desire, preachment, influence—can only affect the boy's character through the boy's conscious or unconscious. A very large measure of the constant conflict which surges in the life of the normal boy in the "teens" is due to conflicting tendencies and desires which struggle for place as habits. Those which society unconsciously fosters and permits or which the original nature of the boy provides are frequently at "grips" with those young habits "wished on" or "grafted on" the youth from without. The adult conventions and customs which home or school of church are trying to "put on" from without are often less strong than those that push from within. The ultimate character and quality of the lad is the resultant of these internal and external forces. Neither can be spared. An absence of external restraints would produce unsocial, selfish sort of barbarians. Too much of external will crush the initiative and power of the boy leaving a nice quiet, inoffensive, "do-less" individual. The boy's power and drive and initiative must not be stifled. The old idea of "breaking the will" of a child was spiritual murder.

Tactful suggestion, and the leadership and influence which spring from companionship with youth would have made possible a control over the child and have still left him his own immortal spirit uncrushed or unmarred, but led by right habits tactfully initiated by making them attractive to him. The chasm between the internal and the external is real and steep and deep. Scouting has much to offer for bridging it as scouting pushes from within not from without. Its activities have been so wisely chosen that under intelligent and sympathetic leadership they represent things the boy wants to do. They utilize the ebb and flow of the boy's interest and the resultant habit formation becomes rapid because welcome.

P. T. A. MEETING HAS PICTURES

The Concord Township P. T. A. held their sixth meeting at the gym March 22, 1932.

The moving picture "Timothy's Guest" and a one reel comedy, "How the Camel Got His Hump" were greatly enjoyed by young and old.

A short business session was held after the pictures at which time a nominating committee was appointed as follows: Mr. O. K. Shull, Mrs. Cora Curie and Mr. Willis Cox.

Mrs. Pluma Hamilton read the following communication:

"How fast does a normal child develop in weight, in height, in mind? Parents must know this in order to help their children develop normally. They must know not only how much the child should weigh, how tall he is, how many teeth he should have, but what he should be able to do at one year and at six years; what they may expect of him in the way of understanding, of carrying out commands, of being responsible for belongings. They must understand, too, that children do not all grow and develop alike. The average child needs thoughtful consideration as well as the frail child or the slow child or the unusually gifted child."

"In spite of individual differences, however, there are certain things a mother may look for at different ages as her children develop."

"Pre-school stations have been organized by representatives of the Child Hygiene Division of the State Board of Health for the purpose of assisting mothers in taking proper care of their children. Mothers with children of the ages from two to six years are cordially invited to bring them to the DeKalb County station to be held Tuesday and Wednesday, March 29 and 30 at the Eckhart library in Auburn. Registration hours 9 to 11:30 and 1 P. M."

One trouble with moving pictures is that the producers seem to know nothing about what small town people like. Moreover, they seem to care less.

SMILING FACES AT THE SHRINE MONDAY

To a world that is weary, the very mention of the name of Fred Stone comes as a missionary of high spirits and mirth. Let it be known, then, that Mr. Stone is due to come to the Shrine Theatre for one night, Monday, March 28, in his latest and best musical comedy success, "Smiling Faces." With him as chief support will be his entrancing and bewitching daughter, Paula Stone.

PAULA STONE

It was about thirty-one years ago—on December 10, 1900, to be exact—that Fred Stone first achieved national prominence. This was in a piece known as "The Girl From Up There" at the Herald Square Theatre in New York. At the time, and for many years thereafter, Mr. Stone's partner was David Montgomery. Followed many hits—"The Red Mill," "The Wizard of Oz" and a long line till Mr. Montgomery was taken away; a partnership of grandiose proportions went the way of the gods. Mr. Stone continued to carry on alone, but ever more mirth-provoking, till finally came the day when his daughter, Dorothy, joined him, and later, Paula. Always, Mr. Stone has retained a position unique in the American theatre, and in "Smiling Faces" he has the best vehicle of his career.

The action of "Smiling Faces" is swift, arresting. Mr. Stone is a motion picture director, for the

M., at the Presbyterian Church. Miss Nellie C. Young, State Children's Division Superintendent, will address the conference, using as her subject, "Finding our Objectives, and the Jesus Method of Teaching." Miss

MISS NELLIE C. YOUNG

Young needs no introduction to Sunday School workers of DeKalb County, having addressed numerous meetings over the county. It is hoped that the greatest possible number will avail themselves of again hearing Miss Young.

MAKE THEIR FIRST PUBLIC APPEARANCE

The Men's Community Chorus made their initial debut at the Coburntown Church last Sunday evening to a well pleased audience.

Seven numbers of very appropriate Easter songs were sang, interspersed by a short and to the point sermon entitled "Why I believe in the Resurrection" by Rev. Walter Coburn.

The numbers of the chorus are much pleased by the comments on their performance and are endeavoring to improve as much as possible.

They may be heard at the Lutheran Church after the chicken supper on Friday evening.

Hon. David Hogg, Congressman Files for Republican Re-nomination

Congressman David Hogg republican representative from the old twelfth Indiana district announced Friday that he would be a candidate for the nomination in the primaries May 3 as a candidate for election from the new fourth district, which comprises the six counties of the old twelfth plus Adams and Wells counties.

Hogg is now serving his fourth term as a congressman having been elected to the sixty-ninth, seventieth, seventy-first and seventy-second congresses. He is a member of the house postoffice and post roads committee.

Copies of his notice of candidacy were sent to the Indiana secretary of state and the authorities at Fort Wayne. Mr. Hogg was born in Jackson county, Indiana, and was graduated from Indiana University, College of Liberal Arts in 1909; the Indiana University School of Law in 1912, beginning the practice of law at Fort Wayne in June 1913. He devoted his time to the practice of law until his election to congress. He was married to Miss Mildred Sellers on May 20, 1925.

Mr. Hogg has a record as a young congressman that is above reproach, and his district has been given every possible consideration from his office. He has always stood for the better things in life and he will again present himself to his district with a promise to continue to work for the same legitimate interests of his people, as in the past. Republican voters should by all means re-nominate Mr. Hogg.

OBITUARY

Anna Eliza Nelson was born near Stillwater Tuscarawas County, Ohio, March 30, 1853 and departed this life at her home in St. Joe, Indiana, on March 25, 1932, aged 78 years, 11 months and 25 days.

At the age of eight years she came with her parents to Newville Township, DeKalb County, Indiana. There she lived until her marriage to Walter M. Abel on March 30, 1870.

To this union were born two children. One son, Ross H. Abel, of near Spencerville and one daughter, Lulu M. Carper, of near Auburn, Indiana.

After living on the Old Abel Homestead for two years, they moved to their new home one-half mile west of Coburn's Corners, where she continued to reside until the death of her husband which occurred September 13, 1917. The remainder of her life was spent with her son and daughter and in her home in St. Joe.

For the past six years she has been an invalid due to a paralytic stroke.

At an early age she united with the Methodist Episcopal Church of Stillwater, Ohio, then upon moving to Indiana, she united with the church at Wesley Chapel, in Newville Township later transferring her membership to the Lutheran Church at St. Joe which membership she held until her death.

In all her life she was industrious and her uppermost thoughts were for the comfort and welfare of others.

She leaves to mourn her departure, a son, Ross H. Abel, a daughter, Mrs. Lulu M. Carper, two grandchildren, Hugh W. Carper, of Auburn and Mrs. Nellie Robinson also of Auburn and four great grandchildren, one sister, Esther Nelson Karn, of Fort Wayne, and a host of other relatives and friends.

Her passing may be expressed in words of the poet:

"Out of my bondage, sorrow and night

Jesus I come, Jesus I come

Into thy freedom gladness and light,

Jesus I come to thee.

Out of my sickness unto thy health,

Out of my want and unto thy wealth,

Out of my sin and unto thyself,

Jesus I come to thee."

The funeral services were held from the Lutheran Church Monday afternoon, conducted by Rev. A. K. Mumma, of Harlan, assisted by Rev. J. N. Scholes. Burial in Riverside cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our thanks to our relatives, neighbors and friends for their sympathy and kindness during the sickness and death of our Mother, also for floral offerings.

Mr. and Mrs. Ross Abel,
Mr. and Mrs. Philip Carper and Family.

TO BE STATE ROAD
NUMBER ONE, MAY 15

Some changes in state road markings will take place May 15, due to the highway commission taking over the new paved road in DeKalb county. From Ft. Wayne, road No. 1, will pass through Leo, Spencerville, St. Joe, Butler and Hamilton, connecting with Road 20, four miles east of Angola. When the change takes place, the road south out of Auburn to Fort Wayne will be numbered 427, instead of Number One.

There is a possibility that the gravel section of this strip of road will be made dust proof this summer.

Mrs. Jennie Clinesmith, of Helmer, Indiana, is here the guest of Mr. and Mrs. W. B. Cox and son, for a couple of weeks.

Mrs. Jennie Sechler came home Saturday, after spending the past few months with her daughter, Mrs. Flossie Mavis, and family at Auburn.

HOW IT STARTED

By JEAN NEWTON

WHY IT IS A "POTBOILER"

WE ARE all familiar with those commonplaces of literature which are known as "potboilers"—but just why they are so-called may not at first thought seem clear.

The word "potboiler" in its application to writing is a metaphorical allusion to the kitchen utensil known as the "pot."

The term "potboiler" was applied to any bit of writing begotten of speed and the need to live—writing which furnished the wherewithal to exist, that is, fuel to boil the pot, and food with which to fill it.

The expression has been variously credited, among others, to Ben Jonson, Swift and Dickens.

Spanish Royal Palace Is Now Open to Public

Madrid.—The former royal palace at Madrid, one of the finest of its kind in the world, has been thrown open to the public as the "Museum of the Republic."

Visitors are allowed to see the throne room, sitting rooms, banquet halls, the famous "Hall of Columns," where so many functions—including that of foot-washing on Good Friday—took place, but so far they are not permitted to visit the private apartments and bedrooms formerly occupied by the king, queen and the infants.

During the days of the monarchy the palace was not open to the public, but it was nevertheless possible to gain admittance through a letter from one's embassy, provided the royal family was not in residence at that time.

Texas English Teacher Has Remarkable Record

Austin, Texas.—Dr. Morgan Callaway, Jr., of the University of Texas, ranks second in the nation in the length of service as a college English teacher, according to the English Journal, a publication for teachers.

Doctor Callaway has been teaching for 51 years, the last 41 at the university here. His record is exceeded only by that of James Main Dixon, at the University of Southern California.

Eagle Drops Calf on Roof of Auto

Colorado Springs, Colo.—Raymond Harvey had a narrow escape from death when a 75-pound calf crashed out of the sky through the top of a touring car in which he and three other rabbit hunters were riding.

The calf had been dropped by an eagle which the hunters then shot. The bird was over 7 feet from wing tip to tip.

Harvey was slightly dazed for a time after the calf hit him.

The Kitchen Cabinet

TAPIOCA, COOKING ADJUNCT

NOT long ago tapioca was nothing more than a food product to be used in various ways as puddings, with an occasional soup, thickened with a tablespoonful or two; but the countless ways in which it may form a part of a variety of dishes has raised it to an important place in the culinary department. The granulated, quick cooking tapioca is here to keep pace with the swiftness of the age in which we live.

One of the pleasant things which all cooks appreciate is the fact that this tapioca does not lump; one need not spend time stirring it for fear of lumping. When well blended with sugar or other ingredients, it needs no further care. Added to sauces and soups it makes a fine thickening agent. For deep frying dishes, much as fritters, it gives substance without heaviness and the fritter stays up better—has less tendency to fall. Used in meat loaves and croquettes it gives tenderness and moisture and supplies body without the taste of starch to berry pies, tomato and dishes of that kind.

Apple Tapioca Fritters.—Cook two tablespoonfuls of tapioca for 15 minutes in a cupful of water and one-half teaspoonful of salt. Cook in a double boiler. Pare and cut three tart apples into eighths or slices. Beat one egg, add two-thirds of a cupful of milk, the tapioca and three-fourths of a cupful of pastry flour sifted with one teaspoonful of baking powder. Stir in two tablespoonfuls of fruit sirup. Mix the apple slices in the batter and fry in deep fat. Drain on brown paper and sprinkle with powdered sugar. Fat should be tested by dropping a small cube of bread into it; when it browns in a minute it is ready for fritter batter.

Princess Pudding.—Cook one cupful of quick-cooking tapioca with one-half cupful of sugar and one and three-fourths pints of water, boiling when added. Cook until smooth and clear, add one glass of jelly and stir until dissolved. Chill or pour into molds and chill and serve with whipped cream.

Judge's English Bad, but His Law Is Good

Bridgeport, Conn.—Superior Court Judge Foster gave himself a lesson in English, but marked himself 100 in law.

Counsel sought to have his judgments in two civil actions set aside because he used faulty language, saying "an ordinarily reasonable and prudent person." Foster declining to set aside the judgments said:

"This group of words constitutes awkward, clumsy and imperfect English. In place of these words there should be substituted 'reasonably prudent person.' But the only power the court has to disturb the verdict is based on some error of law by the judge or jury."

Expedition Discovers Old Assyrian Tablets

Philadelphia.—A highly colored haematite figurine of a bull, decorated with gold tracings, has been found by the University of Pennsylvania archaeological expedition at Tell Billa in Mesopotamia.

Word of the find was sent to the university museum by Dr. E. A. Spuler, field director of the expedition. "In addition to the figure of the bull," Doctor Spuler reported, "we have unearthed a number of Assyrian tablets, a gold carving and a beautifully carved small ivory plaque more than 4,000 years old."

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

by WALTER TRUMBULL

It was at the Coffee House club that Ernest Poole, the novelist, told me this story. He said it was true and that he had written it about ten years ago, but that I might tell it again. Perhaps you never read it or heard it. I never had. Mr. Poole said it was told to him by Mrs. Hoover, either during or just after the war. At any rate, there was a young fellow from Texas whose father had known Buffalo Bill. From hearing of the latter's tours and exploits, the young fellow got an idea that Europe might still be a fertile ground for some sort of wild west show. He had made a bit of money in the cattle country, probably $2,500 or so, and decided that was sufficient capital, if things were managed right. His first move was to round up some Indians. He picked Carlisle graduates; educated Indians who knew their way about and would understand the scheme and go into it on a percentage basis. The Texan had a show cowboy suit, with silver buttons on the chaps and all the trimmings, and each Indian got hold of a war bonnet and other things an Indian might be expected to wear. So away they went.

When they got to Europe there was enough money left to feed them and buy a few ponies. They gave shows and began to do pretty well. As fast as they accumulated any surplus they put it into more ponies, and began to collect other animals. Finally, they secured a couple of gentle old lions. Customers over there didn't appear to know that African lions do not roam the American Indian country. The show was becoming quite an enterprise. By the time they reached Vienna they had a big tent and small tents and all sorts of things. It looked as if they were going to clean up. But it happened to be late in July, 1914.

No sooner had they pitched their tents and made ready for the performance than they thought they heard a great crowd approaching. It looked as if the show was going to sell out, but the approaching throng turned out to be soldiers, marching in military formation, rank on rank. They went by, and for days soldiers kept going by. By this time, the cowboy and Indians had discovered that a war was in progress. Nobody came to the show but the animals kept on eating. They tried to present the lions to the zoo, but the zoo declined. Finally, they fed the ponies to the lions and themselves lived off the tents, translated into food. The time came when they had nothing left except their costumes. With these and the help of a friendly consul, they made their way toward a port, which was the first step in the direction of home.

In Hoboken, N. J., there lived a Russian family. The boy of twelve had been born in the United States and in 1914 it was decided it was time he went to see his grandmother in Russia. His ticket was purchased and he was shipped over plainly marked for his destination, and with $50, in dollar bills, sewn in his clothes in case of accident. Shipped from point to point, he came within sight of Russian territory just two hours after the border had been closed. Frightened, he protested in English and the little Russian he had learned from his parents. A kindly old Russian soldier, who was on guard beyond the barricade, told him that things were unsettled in that part of the country; that he would not be allowed to cross the border; that the best thing he could do was to make his way to Hamburg and get on a boat for home.

He was a smart child and managed to get to Hamburg, but there he was told that the navy had taken over all the ships and none were returning to the United States. Then, he did not know what to do. He had to spend his dollar bills, one by one, for food, but he slept in the park. There came a rainy, misty morning when he woke on his park bench thoroughly discouraged, lonely and hopeless. It was pretty tough for a friendless little boy in a foreign land, with a war going on and every one too occupied to pay any attention to him. Suddenly, out of the fog across the square, he saw stalking toward him an American cowboy in a wide-brimmed hat, followed by ten Indians in war bonnets. The little boy gave a joyful, thankful cry. He had been taken to circuses and wild west shows and he knew that here were friends from home. His troubles were over.

"Where Are the Films?" Little Johnny, whose parents were the proud owners of a player piano, was visiting a neighbor's home and was much interested in the piano there. After looking all over the instrument, he finally exclaimed, "Well, where do you keep the films for this thing?"

DAIRY FACTS

WHEAT IN RATION FOR DAIRY COWS

Specialists Advise Its Use, for Good Results.

Wheat may be substituted for corn in the dairy ration and good results obtained provided not more than 30 per cent of the ration is supplied by this inexpensive grain, say dairy extension specialists in the department of animal husbandry at the Ohio State university.

The following rations, they state, make good combinations to feed with silage and alfalfa if wheat and soybeans are available: Corn and cob meal 300 pounds, wheat 200 pounds, oats 100 pounds, and soybeans 100 pounds. Their second suggestion is corn and cob meal 400 pounds, ground wheat 300 pounds, oats 200 pounds, cottonseed meal 100 pounds, and soybeans 100 pounds. Still another ration consists of 300 pounds of corn and cob meal, 200 pounds of wheat, 100 pounds oats, 100 pounds wheat bran, and 100 pounds cottonseed meal.

It is best to vary the amount of protein in the grain ration with the roughage available. With clover and silage, 50 to 100 pounds of high protein feeds such as cottonseed meal, linseed oil meal, soybean oil meal, gluten, etc., should be added to each of the three suggested rations. Only those high protein feeds furnishing the most per dollar invested should be purchased. With mixed hay, 100 to 150 pounds of high protein feed are best added to the rations, and if timothy hay and silage are fed it is well to use from 150 to 250 pounds of high protein feeds with the rations.

All grains, the specialists believe, should be ground coarsely or finely cracked. Fine grinding is neither necessary nor desirable.

Grass in Early Spring Not Sufficient for Cow

"How many Wisconsin cow testing association members have given the grass a fair start in spring, before turning their cows out to graze on it?" asks A. J. Cramer, superintendent of the state's testing associations.

He points out that the average cow, giving 25 to 30 pounds of milk daily, requires 20 to 25 pounds of dry matter, and since grass in the spring is about nine-tenths water, a cow would have to gather 200 to 250 pounds of grass daily, to maintain herself adequately. "Foraging at this rate is impossible; the dairy cow should be fed supplementary grains, along with early pastures, if she isn't to be underfed, while the pasture grass is still immature," he declares.

Cramer recommends sweet clover pasture as one remedy, but even then, some grain should be fed, he says, even as little as three pounds daily often greatly increasing the milk returns.

If the pasture is good, he gives as a good grain mix—100 pounds corn meal, 100 pounds ground oats and 100 pounds wheat bran; and if the pasture tends to be poor, a mixture of 300 pounds corn meal, 200 pounds ground oats, 100 pounds wheat bran, and 100 pounds oil meal.

Cows and Cold Weather

A meteorologist from Nebraska tells us that when cold weather sets in his cows dropped from 25 to 30 pounds of milk a day to 10 to 15 pounds a day. He also made some changes in feeding at about the same time cold weather set in. This is quite a drop in milk. Cold weather and changes in feeding are undoubtedly responsible for at least a part of the reduction in milk.

Cows that are accustomed to being comfortably housed during the winter months are not in condition to stand stormy, cold outside temperature and conditions that are a normal part of winter. One cannot turn feeds into milk efficiently with cold air and ice water. Cow barns need not be warmer than 45 to 50 degrees Fahrenheit for cows. There is a lot of difference, however, between 45 degrees Fahrenheit and zero temperature. Try it yourself. Don't blame the cow if she objects to too much cold air.—Hoard's Dairyman.

DAIRY NOTES

Carelessness in feeding increases milk production costs.

Ask your county agent for bulletins and improve your winter evenings learning how to do next season's work more effectively.

Raise heifer calves from only the very best cows, Penn state dairy specialists recommend. "Keep down numbers but improve quality," is a good resolution for the dairyman.

A Wisconsin Dairy Herd Improvement association report states that it takes the profits from three of a dairyman's best producers to pay for having a scrub cow around.

Lime Ridge Septime, a pure-bred Holstein owned and bred by Lime Ridge farm at Poughquag, Dutchess county, New York, gave 21,912 pounds of milk and 752 pounds of fat in her thirteenth year. This record gives her first place in the United States for the year and sixth for all time.

Tractors Across Asia

Chinese Horsemen Take No Chances.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

AFTER ten months of arduous traveling, thirty members of the Citroen-Huatt Trans-Asian expedition have arrived at Peking, in seven tractor cars.

Twelve of the thirty members of the expedition who arrived at the Chinese city left Beyrouth, Syria, on April 4, 1931. To them the gates of Peking marked the end of an 8,000-mile journey across Asia.

From withering heat of the deserts of Asia Minor and the plains of north India where the thermometer registers up to 120 degrees above zero, the expedition slowly worked its way over the Himalayan range, across the torrid trails of Sinkiang (Chinese Turkistan) and into Mongolia, where the mercury hovered below zero.

The light tractor cars of the expedition swept across Iraq, Persia, Afghanistan and India with little difficulty. At Srinagar, the members girded themselves for the herculean task of negotiating the passes, to Gilgit mere trails which never before had felt the vibration of a motor. When Gilgit, in the heart of the Himalayan peaks, was reached, the sturdy cars had skirted some of the world's highest peaks, passed through gorges where the road literally hangs to steep cliffs and crossed flimsy bridges which spanned raging streams. Landslides forced route changes and once the dismantling of the cars which were carried by coolies to the clear road a mile beyond.

One pass negotiated by the expedition was nearly three miles above sea level. Beyond Gilgit, the impassable road forced abandonment of the cars. Ponies and yaks carried the leaders of the expedition into Sinkiang where they were met by the second unit of the expedition, composed of heavy tractor cars which had left Peking when the leaders bade farewell to Beyrouth.

Gilgit trail, once the lair of bandits, was peaceful, and political leaders often feted the expedition leaders. Not until the expedition reached China was it disturbed by marauding tribesmen, who stole their supplies. From day to day the leaders could receive no definite assurance of their safety.

Through Nankow Pass.
Wild mountain ranges hemmed in the old caravan road on the last hundred miles of the trip, and rocky defiles made difficult going for the band-driven cars. In Kalgan, a quaint medieval city known as the Gateway to Mongolia, preparations were made for passing through Nankow pass, a remarkable Thermopylae fifteen miles in length. This great defile drops from the first terrace of mountains to the plains of north China. It was first opened up, according to legend, by deities known as Five Tiger Ghosts, patrons of artillery, who blew a passage through the rocks with their cannon.

The inner branch of the Great Wall of China crosses the caravan road squarely in the pass but the members of the expedition found that the great wooden gate, which used to be closed at sunset only to reopen at daybreak, has disappeared. The caravan route could not be traveled by ordinary vehicles. Between Nankow pass and Peking the expedition rolled near China's sacred way, leading to the thirteen tombs of the Ming dynasty, a great roadway lined with gigantic monoliths of men and animals.

Another difficult stretch experienced by the party en route to Peking was that between Langchow and Ning-shan, in China's "Wild West." Because of extremely narrow and hazardous roads, traversed mostly by camels, donkeys and coolies, more than six days were required to make 800 miles. Motor progress was also interrupted by a long ferry trip along the Yellow river.

Arrangements had been made for the deposit at Ning-shan of new tractor bands, which serve instead of wheels on the expedition's cars. On arrival, however, it was found that the bands had been taken by brigands while on their way to the city from Peking. Two camel caravans carrying supplies for the expedition were plundered by rebels in this part of China. The expedition itself was not attacked, and the members were hospitably received by some Chinese officials and by foreign missionaries.

Scientists accompanying the expedition have a unique and comprehensive record of life, customs, occupations, and costumes of tribes and regions which have been little visited since Marco Polo's time.

Original plans for the continuation of the expedition called for a turn southward from Peking through China, and a swing through southern Asia to Syria, but the disturbed state of affairs in China necessitated the shipment of the tractor cars by boat to French Indo-China. The return trip will be made via French Indo-China, Siam, India, and Persia to the starting point, Beyrouth.

What One Sees in Peking.

Peking is a "city within a city." As one passes within the walls he expects to find banners signs of shopkeepers; instead he beholds broad avenues, three miles long, making squares as regular as those of a check-board.

Then the visitor begins to suspect that Peking is the one spacious Chinese city because it is not a Chinese city at all, but a Tatar city, built by adventurous barbarians of the north.

The Chinese portion of the city, dating back to 1543, is the commercial center. The Tatar city is about three hundred years old, and it is the Tatar city which includes the famous "Forbidden City," of which the Dragon Throne of the Son of Heaven, Emperor of the Middle Kingdom, is the center.

The famous throne is of rare wood, exquisitely carved. Behind it is a screen of golden lacquer so dainty in design that it seems a bit of thin lace. Around this throne room are the palaces, shut in by purple walls.

The streets of Peking reflect the city's infinite variety. Every thoroughfare is alive with beasts and vehicles and humans.

Imagine a city where camels go up and down the streets upon legitimate business, not in a circus parade! The visitor strolls along Hatamen street after breakfast, and there they are, on their knees, blinking in the morning sun—dumb, brown beasts, an occasional white one—rather dirty white—among them, chewing their cud in leisure. The pavement before the shops whether they have carried merchandise has been their caravansary for the night. There are dozens upon dozens of them lining the sidewalk, up the street and down.

By and by the drivers come forth, throw their empty sacks between the humps of the animals, rouse them, and lead them off down the street, slowly and softly stepping, in single file, under the great stone arches of the Hata Gate, then westward beside the flowing buttresses of the city wall.

Carts Drawn by Queer Animals.

Almost as fascinating as the camels are the carts of Peking, or rather the little beasts which pull them—ponies, donkeys, mules, and sometimes, elusive creatures that are neither horse, mule, nor ass, but subtle, indistinguishable mixtures. On first sight one is sure they are horses, on the second he is sure they are mules, on the third he is equally sure they are zebras with the stripes worn off. One historian of China speaks of the ancient Tartars as possessing horses, asses, mules, and "other peculiar breeds of the equine family." These ancient other breeds still trot about the Tatar city.

The city's shopping district stamps an overlasting impression upon the traveler. It lies beyond the Legation quarter outside the huge Chien Men gate. This is the Forty-second street and Broadway of Peking and rich stores are grouped beyond it in a district known as Chien Men Wei or outside Chien Men. Each street is given over to dealing in its own special article. Lantern street, Silk street, Silver street, and Furniture street tell by their names what is the main object of trade. There are, however, fur stores, hatters for the sale of fads and precious stones, tobacco shops, restaurants and banks scattered throughout the vast area. In addition theaters and places of amusement have been added for the entertainment of both merchants and public. The whole forms a seething district of narrow, crowded streets, strange smells, and barbaric splendor.

Let the recent arrival at a Legation quarter hotel step into a rickshaw and utter the magic words "Chien Men Wei." The delighted rickshaw coolie grins with glee and breaks into an instant gallop. He knows that according to immemorial custom he can extract from shopkeepers 10 per cent of the sales price of all articles purchased by his passenger. It is part of the "squeeze" system by which China has been run governmentally and commercially for centuries. Of course, actual transfer of cash is never seen by the passenger. He just knows it goes on, as he knows the earth moves.

When You CAN'T QUIT

Fatigue is the signal to rest. Obey it if you can. When you can't, keep cool and carry-on in comfort.

Bayer Aspirin was meant for just such times, for it insures your comfort. Freedom from those pains that nag at nerves and wear you down. One tablet will block that threatening headache while it is still just a threat. Take two or three tablets when you've caught a cold, and that's usually the end of it.

Carry Bayer Aspirin when you travel. Have some at home and keep some at the office. Like an efficient secretary, it will often "have the day" and spare you many uncomfortable, unproductive hours. Perfectly harmless, so keep it handy, keep it in mind, and use it. No man of affairs can afford to ignore the score and more of uses explained in the proven directions. From a grumbling tooth to those rheumatic pains which seem almost to bend the bones, Bayer Aspirin is ready with its quick relief—and always works. Neuralgia, Neuritis. Any nagging, needless pain.

Shooting Merely a Bluff

Some Latin-American countries report to revolutions as a simple form of election and regard it as the best method for making a political change. Charles H. Cunningham, former United States commercial attaché at Lima, Peru, said at St. Louis recently, "There is a lot of blank shooting done in some of the revolutions, with shots being fired mainly for effect." Cunningham said, "During some of the revolutions in Peru foreigners were allowed to transact business as usual in downtown districts, but were warned to keep off of certain streets where fighting was going on."

Automobiles Are Barred

The presence of automobiles in the vicinity of the transatlantic radio telephone stations interferes with the delicate instruments and makes reception difficult, so that all automobiles are banned from the grounds and deliveries are made by horse-drawn vehicles. This applies to all cars except those connected with the station, which are shielded in such a way as to prevent this interference.

Cabbage, Cabbage, Cabbage

By T. E. MYERS, County Agricultural Agent of DeKalb County

Can you grow cabbage successfully in your garden or are you troubled with the plants failing to grow and head properly? Thousands of gardeners everywhere have garden patches in which year after year the cabbage plants become sick and fail to head. In many instances, this is caused by a disease known as "cabbage yellows."

Cabbage plants infected with the yellows disease are stunted and the lower leaves become a pale, lifeless yellow. Unusually, the plant becomes one-sided owing to the more severe attack on one side and a distinct one-sided warping or curvature of the leaves accompanied by the yellowing and subsequent blackening of the stunted half of the leaf becomes very striking. Infected plants usually do not form heads. The lower leaves drop off, leaving a tall, leafless stalk bearing a tuft of leaves or a small head. Plants may die early in the season, but may continue a sickly existence for a month or more, or even until the end of the season.

In the past, no control measures were known but within the last few years, "Yellow's Resistant" strains of cabbage have been developed. Today strains of Holland, a late winter cabbage, "Copenhagen Market" and "All Seasons," summer cabbages, and Early Jersey Wakefield can be planted on soil which is badly infested with yellows and still make almost a perfect crop. Gardeners who have had trouble with this disease should plant only the known resistant strains. Most reliable seedsmen carry these yellow resistant strains, and will gladly furnish them if you are sure to specify in your order that you desire yellows resistant strains.

Get Your Seed Supply

As soon as the family has selected the vegetables to be planted in the 1932 garden, and the amounts of seed needed have been figured, then the next act is to order the garden seed.

Early orders usually carry a considerable discount and insure you against substitutions, besides there is a real satisfaction in having your needed seed supply at home ready for the first break of garden weather.

More home gardens should have root crops planted in them. Provide a variety of beets, turnips, carrots, parsnips and salsify with some radishes for spring summer and winter use. Plant one of the button radishes, such as French Breakfast or Scarlet Globe, and the long White Icicle for early spring use. Through the summer sow Chertier which does well in hot weather; in early August plant the large White Chinese, Chinese Rose, or Black Spanish, for the fall use and winter storage.

Get the jump on Old Man Spring, as well as the neighboring gardeners, by getting your seed supply now before the rush is started by those who are always late.

An Old Gardener's Reminders

Let me pass on to you just a few of the old gardener's reminders, have you got your supply of horse manure for making the hot-bed? Manure is always scarce, so "first come, first served."

You should have your garden plan drawn before this time, but if you should have neglected this important duty, get busy. Plan to use all your space by arranging for companion and succession crops.

Are the garden tools in good order? The hoe blade should be sharpened, all broken handles repaired before the first days of preparation come.

Is your vegetable seed supply ready? The warm days of spring will turn many people's thoughts gardenward. If you neglect to buy of your local dealer early, some of your favorite varieties may be sold out.

A few heads of cabbage in the home garden are always welcome, for boiling, creaming like cauliflower, or in the fall for making kraut.

Order first of all, the seeds of vegetables that you are planting in the hotbed, cabbage, cauliflower, kohlrabi, head lettuce, tomatoes, peppers and egg plants.

Make the acquaintance of Swiss Chard and New Zealand Spinach this summer if you've never grown these delicious "greens" before. A fifteen foot row of Swiss Chard will be enough to supply the average family all summer with some to can or dry as well. Either of these vegetables will flourish through the hot weather from early summer until frost.

A generous supply of pop corn helps out for those cold snaps that will be spent around next winters stove or fire place.

The real gardener will be able to boast of repeated servings of peas, beans, and sweet corn throughout the summer, always with an eye to a liberal vegetable supply for the cold spells when garden days are over. Why not make 1932 the year for joining the Real Gardener's Club.

(If you wish a copy of suggested plan for the home or farm garden, a trip or letter to County Agr. Agent's office will bring it.)

"NO rage like love to hatred turned," has its converse in the experience that no passion is more enduring than that of a hatred which grows into love. It is as though the small seed of affection finds nurture and strength in the opposed and more wasting forces. A case in point is illustrated with tensely dramatic interest in this unusual story—a romance of hearts throbbing to contrary emotions, but which, by gradual and insensible processes, are brought into perfect unison.

FARMERS SEED LOAN OFFICE

The Seed Loan Office for DeKalb County has been set up in the County Agent's Office in the DeKalb County Court House. This loan is available to farmers for supplies necessary for crop production in 1932, for which supplies the farmers are unable to obtain loans from any other source. Such loans will be made upon such terms and subject to such regulations as the government prescribes, including an agreement by each farmer to use the funds thus obtained by him for crop production.

Each individual who obtains a loan for crop production in 1932 must give an absolute first lien on all crops growing or to be grown by him in 1932 in such form as to entitle it to filing in the County in which he resides.

The largest amount which can be loaned to an individual is $400. The amount loaned will be based on the requirements of the applicant for seed, fertilizer, feed or work stock, and fuel and oil for tractors, and other necessary supplies, and the acreage of crops on which he gives a crop lien to secure the payment of the loan made to him. Loans in DeKalb County will be based on the approximate cost of all supplies necessary for crop production, including fertilizer, but in no case in excess of a total amount of $6 per acre for general field crops, and $20 per acre for truck crops, including potatoes.

Any farmer that has been a farmer in 1931 is eligible for a loan regardless of whether he is a tenant, share cropper or land owner, but any application where more than one party is interested in the growing crops must have waivers sign by the other interested parties signing over their right to the crop until the loan is paid.

The application requires a legal description of the land on which these crops are to be planted, together with a statement of the acreage of crops grown by the applicant in 1930 and 1931 and the yields obtained, together with a statement of seed and feed which the applicant has on hand at the time of making application with which to start farming operations for 1932. It also requires an agreement to use money loaned for the purpose of necessary supplies for crop production in 1932 on the land described and a further statement to the effect that the applicant does not have the means or credit with which to secure the necessary supplies for crop production in 1932 and that if he does not obtain the loan applied for he will be unable to farm in 1932. It also exacts a promise from the applicant that he will notify the regional office in the event he is not able for any reason to plant and cultivate the full acreage of the crops specified.

The law provides that any person who shall intentionally make any material false representation for the purpose of obtaining an advance, loan, or sale, or of assisting in obtaining such advance, loan, or sale under this resolution shall upon conviction thereof be punished by a fine not exceeding $1,000 or by imprisonment not exceeding six months, or both.

Interest at the rate of 5 1/2 per cent will be charged on all loans. All notes due November 30, 1932. All applications must be in by April 30, 1932. For further particulars see the County Agent.

HABIT IN A BOY'S LIFE

Continuous Control on the part of the boy either intelligently or sullenly applied can either hasten the adult habit formation program or block it almost completely.

If the boy, made conscious of his own future-building prowess can be gotten into partnership with himself in habit formation, then things can move swiftly.

When a Scout takes the Scout oath and law and embarks on a pleasurable adventure in becoming "prepared" for citizenship service and the doing of voluntary "good turns"—when this has begun—the boy has filed incorporation papers for the partnership-with-himself which, under the oft unconscious guidance of a great hearted Scoutmaster build the kind of a man the partnership wills to build. The Scoutmaster's example is always potent.

There is nothing mysterious about such "conscious evolution." Life does not readily rise higher than its source. The boy's actual character will tower very little above his ideals. He sees and notes what he elects to see and note in any situation. He has a power of selective attention. The boy's own "mind-set" screens out what he does not "attend to," what he does not want.

A "good turn" mind-set with its desire to be helpful greatly reduces the chance of conflict with other people. One is looking for something else and of course finds what he looks for.

Then, too, big qualities like honor, loyalty, good citizenship, are not big mysterious qualities which one somehow gets; on the contrary, they must be readily analyzed into myriad small components and simple acts the aggregate of which give the impressive total virtue. These little acts in question, easily become habits through exercise, and almost unconsciously the total is builded.

An illustration of how this works is to be found in the very thought-stimulating research along this line done at Columbia University in the Horace Mann School of Teachers' College.

The New York Times for Sunday, October 19, 1919, printed a brief summary of this analysis worked out by Mrs. Upton and Miss Ahassell of the School Staff. Their analysis so admirably illustrates this phase of habit analysis—that part is here quoted:

"The tabulation of the work of the experts shows twenty-four such qualities or attributes of good citizenship, and that the scale includes 187 different concrete acts. Let us first consider the plan of the civic virtues as worked out on the basis of one thousand points. They have all been evaluated in the table which is herewith presented:

Some elements of Good Citizenship are: Assuming responsibility, 11; 85; honesty and reliability, 70; cooperation, 60; helpful initiative, 60; taking care of health, 50; grasp of fundamentals, 40; courtesy, 45; choosing good associates, 40; promptness, 40; loyalty, 40; ability to concentrate, 40; self control, 35; self reliance, 35; thrift, 35; generosity, 35; broad sympathy and outlook, 35; shows improvement, 35; willingness to accept criticism, 30; courage, without fool-hardiness, 30; refinements, 25; obedience, 25; good posture, 25; orderliness, 25; realizing when help is needed from teacher or fellow pupil, 20; conscious of school program, 20; totals 1,000.

(Note: The careful reader will note the omission of any religious element from the analysis of good citizenship. The Scout movement by its Constitution, its Twelfth Law and its purpose avowed by its original sponsors is pledged to and does insist that the religious element must be included in any adequate analysis of citizenship.)

Carry Medical Aid to Isolated Area

Women Nurses Do Splendid Work in Hill Country.

Washington.—The novel method by which a small group of women nurses have in six years brought medical care to a remote rural area, typical of many in the United States, where no doctor could make a living and the people were too ignorant and poor to care for themselves, are described in a study just published by the committee on the cost of medical care.

The report gives a glimpse of one of America's still existing frontier regions in the back country of Kentucky, where social and health conditions were all but medieval, and where it costs a dollar a mile to bring a doctor into the wilderness on a visit.

In a part of this district the Frontier Nursing service maintains its health outposts, whence nurse-midwives ride out on horseback to combat squalor, ignorance and disease. The study, by Anne Winslow, executive secretary of the service, tells how these women have succeeded at moderate cost in providing midwifery, nursing, surgical, medical, dental, hospital and social service for the region.

The portion of the frontier on which the service operates lies in Leslie, Perry, Clay and Bell counties. The organization was established through the work of Mrs. Mary Breckenridge, a graduate nurse who made the first survey in 1914, with a view of determining the health needs of the region and devising a way to meet them. Her visit was followed in 1925 by a survey in Leslie county by Miss Bertram Ireland, who worked in conjunction with the state board of health of Kentucky, to check up on unreported births and deaths.

Miss Winslow writes: "There was no physician in Leslie county, and in one contiguous area of three counties surveyed there were 15,000 people without one registered physician. In this area it took the nearest doctor six to twenty hours on horseback to reach a patient. Necessarily, the average fee of $1 a mile was prohibitive for all but a few families; the average total income per capita was under $143 a year."

"Epidemics of typhoid fever, diphtheria and smallpox occurred frequently," Miss Winslow continues. "Owing to their ignorance of any form of sanitation, the people were riddled with hookworm."

After Mrs. Breckenridge had visited the region she decided, writes Miss Winslow, "that the health of mothers and children was the most urgent problem and that the situation called for trained nurse-midwives, who might combine a program of public health and bedside nursing with midwifery."

The Frontier Nursing service grew out of this belief. It consists at present of 28 nurses on duty at nine nursing centers. The service maintains an 18 bed hospital, built three years ago.

Scattered through neighboring counties are a few doctors who can be called upon whenever necessary, and there is a surgeon in the nearest town, 23 miles from the hospital.

In their last fiscal year the nurses of the frontier service attended 9,736 people in 1,851 families, making 47,827 visits altogether.

The total cost of the service was $106,406.49 for the year, averaging $10.02 a patient, but the 9,736 patients served were able to pay only $3,367.43 of the total.

Old Size Money Out Totals $573,000,000

Washington.—More than $573,000,000 in old-fashioned over-size paper currency is still lying about the country. This money, representing almost 9 per cent of all the paper money in existence, is believed to be held largely by hoarders. Banks have long since ceased using it and have turned it in for exchange for the smaller and handier size.

Treasury officials say it is entirely too early to decide just how much of the money is being hoarded and how much has been lost, destroyed or removed from circulation channels in other ways.

Soviet Ex-Stammerers Speak at Convention

Moscow.—A conference of ex-stammerers took place here in which every delegate proved his right to attend by making a speech. Addressing the conference of former stammerers, Professor Vsevolod Kostchenko said that there are 2,000,000 persons with speech defects in the country and that practically all are curable. "Tractor" and "plastilinka" (five year plan) are among the most difficult words for stammerers to pronounce.

Youth and Girl Will Make Test of Love

Seek to Prove Wiles of Cupid Are Lasting.

Kansas City, Mo.—To prove that his wiles are lasting, Dan Cupid is about to be entered in a long contest with time, with the announcement of the winner to be made in five or six years.

The little fellow must stand by and watch the annulment of the marriage of Kathleen Stewart, fifteen, said to be a granddaughter of Col. Robert W. Stewart, chairman of the board of the Standard Oil Company of Indiana, and Paul T. Lange, Jr., eighteen, son of a Kansas City druggist.

Proceedings for the annulment were made at the direction of the bride's mother, Mrs. Robert Anderson.

Cupid may hover as close to his victims as he chooses while the girl pursues her studies at the exclusive Barstow School for Girls here and the boy attends college. These are the terms of an agreement reached by the bridegroom and their parents.

If, at the end of the school year, Cupid is the master of the situation, Paul and Kathleen again may become engaged.

But then looms another separation, according to Paul T. Lange, father of the bridegroom. Robert G. Stewart of New York, father of Kathleen, has promised to send her to Vassar college for four years and Paul will begin a two-year course at the University of Kansas.

After that the winner of the contest between Cupid and time will be announced, and if the principals in the 1931 holiday romance still are as much in love they may be remarried with their parents' blessings.

The couple eloped to Merriam, Kan., and were married without the consent of their parents. Both gave their ages as over eighteen, to eliminate the necessity of obtaining their parents' permission.

Stillwater Vets Form a New Last Man's Club

Stillwater, Minn.—Another "Last Man's club" composed of veterans of the World war is being formed here.

The original "Last Man's club" composed of Civil war soldiers, held its last meeting and disbanded two years ago, with Charles M. Lockwood of Chamberlain, S. D., the last survivor.

The new club, to be known as the "Bully Beef club," is made up of 285 American Legion men identified with the Stillwater post, although all are not residents here.

Instead of the famous bottle of Burgundy wine that graced the annual banquet table of the original club, a can of "bully beef" brought back from France by Doctor Frissell of Brownstown, Minn., will be the trophy of the new club. It is to be opened by the last survivor, probably 50 years from now.

Air Pilots Drop Papers to Lonely Homesteaders

El Paso, Texas.—Johnnie Martin and Paul Carpenter, air line pilots who fly between this city and Los Angeles, are welcomed daily by lonely homesteaders over whose property they fly.

Martin and Carpenter, although they never have met any of the homesteaders, know practically all of them by name, the result of letters of introduction to the airmen.

The two flyers drop daily papers to the homesteaders. One woman wrote them asking they write the correct time on the next paper they dropped her.

"My clock has stopped," she explained.

Radio Proves Its Worth at Rounding Up Bandits

Oklahoma City.—The Oklahoma county crime detection radio station has proved so successful that it will be expanded into a statewide system.

The principal aim of the system will be to capture bank robbers, which have become a menace to the state recently.

The station, KOPH, will be increased to 250 watt power. It was established originally as a municipal detective agency for Oklahoma City.

Pay 55c Freight on Hide He Sold for 60c

St. Mary, Kan.—A Kansas farmer, Ralph Hilton, has a real souvenir of the depression. Hilton recently killed a calf and sent its hide to a Tropic tannery. The hide brought 60 cents. The freight was 55 cents. Hilton received a check for 5 cents. He framed it.

FOOLED THE VOTERS

"What made you elect that man to the legislature?"

"Well," replied the voter, "he showed us his calloused, toll-stained palms and convinced us that he was one of us plain people."

"But he proved a disappointment?"

"Yes. We found out too late that he got his hands into that shape by trying to fix his own car."—Washington Star.

No Time for That

Alice had been disappointed in love. Her aunt was telling her a few home truths on the subject of life.

"Ah, my dear," she said, "you will find that time is a great healer."

The girl nodded.

"That's true enough," she replied; "but it's certainly a very poor beauty doctor."

HARD ON SHOES

"Walking home has preserved the happiness of many a girl."

"And yet it's bad for the sole."

His Expectations

"You must remember, my boy, that wealth does not bring happiness," said the fatherly person.

"I don't expect it," answered the modern youth. "I merely want it so that I may be able to choose the kind of misery that is most agreeable to me."

Expurgation Demanded

"Did you read Homer in your youth?"

"Yes," answered the unwavering advocate of peace. "I objected then to his fascinating flight descriptions. The Iliad is a beautiful literary work. But it ought to be expurgated."

USE FOR HORNS

Dad (describing animal)—And the cow carries two horns on her head.

Willie—And does she blow 'em to let you know she's coming, dad?

Lucky Alice

Little Marjorie was describing her experience as an attendant at her sister's wedding.

"First of all, we went to church and walked up to the front, where they gave away a ring and Alice got it."

After Something Else

Husband—Going to church, eh? To show your new furs, I suppose.

Wife—No, dear, to show everybody what a generous hubby I've got.—Boston Transcript.

No Returns

A racing man was induced to invest in some oil stock. A little later a friend asked him how his stock was coming on.

"It was left at the post."

No Escape

"At least a small income isn't taxed," said the cheerful guy.

"No," growled the gloomy one, "but it taxes a wife's patience, and that's even worse for her husband than a tax on his income."—Uncle Sam's Enquirer.

No Trouble There

Juryman—Sir, I desire to be excused from jury duty, as I can only hear with one ear.

Judge—Oh, you'll do. We hear only one side of a case at a time.

Put a Collar on Him

Husband—Now that I've lost everything in Wall Street, do you mind being poor, dear?

Wife—Not at all. Everybody thinks the wolf at our door is our police dog.—Border Cities Star.

Excusable

The Auditor—You shouldn't be so hard on that poor young office boy.

The Cashier—Gosh, I didn't know his father owned so much stock in the company.

FEW FISH ESCAPE PURSUIT OF OTTER

Among all the animals that are good fishermen, there is probably none more capable than the otter. You can often locate him by finding broken shells of shellfish, or which he seems to be especially fond. He leaves the scattered fragments of his meal on the banks of streams and lakes and among the rocks.

The coat of the otter is of brown fur, and it is so valuable that, in order to prevent men from taking it from him, as he prefers to wear it himself, he hides away near secluded lakes or water courses far from any place where men live. He is almost twice the size of the mink, being often 40 inches long, and looks something like a seal when he is partly out of water and his wet fur gleams in the sun.

This clever fisherman is the champion of the fishing veterans who wear fur. No fish is too swift for him. Whereas the mink prefers to take his fishing easily, the otter dives, swims or floats after his prey. He is an expert swimmer and can dart about under the water with wonderful speed, so that no fish has much of a chance when he goes fishing. He always catches his fish.

Another water dweller who sometimes get credit as a fisherman, but lives on a vegetarian diet, is the beaver. The beaver builds his home out in the water and there stores up his winter food. He likes the bark of trees and these he cuts down when they are succulent and tender with the sap. He gathers enough to tide him over the winter time, and lives on his hoard, leaving the fish, strangely enough, strictly alone.

Double Purpose Served in Odd Statue Designs

On a nobleman's estate in Silesia there is a collection of some of the most curious statues in the world. The statues are carved in linden wood and are slightly more than life size. They comprise a considerable number of figures, which include the 12 Apostles, a few saints, peasant women and even a figure representing the former lord of the manor, who is seen with his arm linked through that of a soldier comrade.

All of the statues are hollow and each one of them is a beehive, openings in the backs of the figures providing for the entrance and exits of the honey-gathering insects.

The records of the manor show that the first of the wooden statues was put in place in the year 1000.—Philadelphia Record Sunday Magazine.

Engine Governs Speed

If a man will but build an engine powerful enough there is nothing to keep him from flying at a speed of 1,000 miles an hour, believes Squadron Leader A. H. Orlebar, captain of the Schneider cup team, members of which have already flown in excess of 400 miles an hour. "Flying at high speeds is a perfectly wonderful sensation," he said. "But there is a much bigger thrill in tobogganing or skiing. If somebody will design the engines there is nothing to the human element to prevent airplanes reaching a speed of 1,000 miles an hour."

Up-to-Date Ducks

Mary's mother raised a large flock of wild ducks this year. One windy day they all took to the air. Mary never had seen them on the wing before and ran to her mother, saying, "Oh, look, mother. Our ducks all have airplanes!"

A statesman with his ear to the ground may hear only old footsteps departing.

Now keep nose open all night

Use this cream—You breathe freely—Catarrh disappears

In less than a minute the clogged nasal passages clear right up and that application of ELYS CREAM BALM will keep your breathing freely and keep your head clear for at least 10 hours. This fragrant, soothing antiseptic is the best thing you can use for keeping the nose clear, for relieving head colds and Catarrh. It penetrates and clears up every air passage in the head, soothes the inflamed or swollen tissue and brings instant relief! Try it. Sold by all druggists.

A Journeyman Already Householder—Even if you are begging you might be polite when asking.

Beggar—What! Trying to teach me my trade?

Pure Blood; Was Rundown, Nervous

Quincy, Ill.—"I wish to praise Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I know it to be a most wonderful medicine for poor blood and for bad effects of colds—a good general tonic," said Mrs. Rose Davis, of 505 South 5th St.

"Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, too, benefited me wonderfully when I was rundown, weak and nervous from woman's ailment. I would advise anyone to try these remedies."

Fluid or tablets. All druggists.

Medical advice is free to users of Dr. Pierce's medicines. Just write to Dr. Pierce's Clinic in Buffalo, N. Y.

Fireproof Forests Germany is making its forests practically fireproof by careful planting of different types of trees.—Country Home.

COLDS

RUB Musterole well into your chest and throat—almost instantly you feel easier. Repeat the Musterole-rub once an hour for five hours... what a glorious relief!

Those good old-fashioned cold remedies—oil of mustard, menthol, camphor—are mixed with other valuable ingredients in Musterole to make it what doctors call a "counter-irritant" because it gets action and is not just a salve. It penetrates and stimulates blood circulation and helps to draw out infection and pain. Used by millions for 20 years. Recommended by many doctors and nurses. All druggists.

To Mothers—Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

Um

"Is the world getting better?"

"I thing so. People no longer break up your home to get your flat."

Wrong Place

He—I'm groping for words.

She—Well, you don't expect to find them around my neck, do you?

Modern Help

Lady (at employment agency)—Have you your references with you?

Cook—Yes'm! have you?

Stronger than He Was at Twenty

FIFTY-FIVE years old, and still going strong!

Do you want the secret of such vitality? It isn't what you eat, or any tonic you take. It's something anyone can do—something you can start today and see results in a week! All you do is give your vital organs the right stimulant.

A famous doctor discovered the way to stimulate a sluggish system to new energy. It brings fresh vigor to every organ. Being a physician's prescription, it's quite harmless. Tell your druggist you want a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepsin. Get the benefit of its fresh laxative herbs, active senna, and that pure pepsin. Get that lazy liver to work, those stagnant bowels into action. Get rid of waste matter that is slow poison so long as it is permitted to remain in the system.

The new energy men and women feel before one bottle of Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepsin has been used up in proof of how much the system needs this help.

Get a bottle of this delicious syrup and let it end that constant worry about the condition of the bowels. Spare the children those bilious days that make them miserable. Save your household from the use of cathartics which lead to chronic constipation. And guard against auto-intoxication as you grow older.

Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepsin is such a well known preparation you can get it wherever drugs are sold and it isn't expensive.

War Hero Is Now a Window Washer

David E. Hayden was found the other day in Los Angeles washing windows at 20 cents an hour. Nearly fourteen years ago, at Thiancourt, in France, he crawled across No Man's Land, a wounded officer on his back, disregarding machine gun fire to save his comrade's life. For this deed the United States gave him the Congressional Medal of Honor; France, a Croix de Guerre with two palms and a star and her Medal of Commemoration; Italy, her War Cross; Portugal, her rare War Cross. "To David E. Hayden, nineteen, youngest war hero," read the citations. "I'm not kidding!" emphatically declared Hayden, now thirty-three years old. "He work, isn't it? Maybe not the kind I should prefer, but I want to work."

JOHN GRESHAM'S GIRL

By CONCORDIA MERREL

(Copyright)—WNU Service.

Perhaps no living man could have failed to be impressed by the vision of sweet youth which Lucy Gresham made, standing at the busy street corner, her small hands catching the broken ends of a strand of beads against her breast. A little startled at close escape from a serious automobile accident, but more inclined to laugh at the peculiarity of the affair in leaving her uninjured and taking toll only from her necklace. But the pretty and handsome stranger who plunged into the traffic and tied it in a hard knot while he sought the escaped beads seemed not concerned with youth and beauty. There was something about his eyes that would have chilled romance and put Cupid to sleep.

Little did the girl realize as the brilliant stranger restored to her the beads as he could recover, and she looked into his eyes, that she was gazing into the orb of fate. How was she to know that this chance meeting was to set in motion a chain of events that would alter the course of several lives, affect vast enterprises and result in one of the strangest domestic tangles ever recorded? How could she know that her future was to be entwined with that of her father's bitterest enemy? Life is a queer show, as the man said to himself many times afterward, and the grimmest of human resolutions are felled about like dry leaves by the winds of destiny. No emotion or purpose will withstand the power of the human affection, as is amply set forth in this absorbing story of a revenge that turned to love.

CHAPTER I

A Broken Thread

Lucy Gresham was walking down Bond street, after a morning of delightfully frivolous shopping, when in crossing the top of a rather narrow street was nearly knocked down by a big, blue car that was turning into Bond street at a somewhat reckless pace.

To avoid the danger, she darted for the opposite pavement, and found it safely, but in doing so, somehow managed to catch her hand sharply in a long chain of Chinese beads she was wearing. As the thread snapped, she caught the broken ends quickly against her breast, but she was not in time to prevent several of the beads from scattering into the roadway.

The owner of the car pulled up, swung himself to the ground, and next moment was standing before her, hat in hand, apologizing.

At the sound of his voice, Lucy looked up sharply, and found her eyes caught, and most unexpectedly held, by the man who stood looking down at her. The obvious aspects of his appearance were his huge height, immense breadth of shoulder, and a suggestion of great strength; but it was not these superficial things that had the power to catch Lucy's interest so quickly. It was, rather, his somber, unsmiling face; dark, sunken eyes—so dark that she could not tell whether they were gray or black—and curiously bitter, unfriendly lips.

His voice: "It was entirely my fault. I'm so sorry. But what exactly happened?" brought her to reality. She drew a quick breath, and said hurriedly:

"It's my necklace. I pulled it somehow, and snapped the thread. Some of the beads came off before I could stop them."

"Only the necklace?" he asked. "I was afraid you had been hurt. I didn't see you until you were right in front of the car." The words were polite enough, but his voice was as somber and unfriendly as his face, and his courtesy was offered without the smallest hint of a smile.

"Oh, the car didn't touch me," she assured him. "The worst that happened was that some of my beads are gone," she added.

"We can probably find those again," he replied. "And then, as unconcerned as if Bond street were no more than a track in the wilderness, he began searching the road and the gutter for the truant beads.

Lucy was interested and amused. It was such a queer sort of thing to happen. As she stood, securing the broken ends of her necklace, she couldn't help wondering who this big, gloomy-looking man was.

But his name, had he given it, would have suggested no clue to his gloom. For, although she might have remembered hearing that James Lee was one of London's newest millionaires, that would rather have suggested that he should be well contented with his lot. If, though, instead of wondering what his name was, she had just spoken her own. . . . But she didn't, and so her thoughts went on, until some interested people broke through them, by pausing to wonder what had happened. Then a policeman came up and wanted to know, with quite friendly officiousness, what it was all about, and warned them that cars must not be left standing at that corner for long.

By this time the big stranger had gathered a round dozen of the beads, and seeing no more lying about, came toward Lucy, holding them in the curve of his palm.

"These are all I can find," he said. "I think they are about all that dropped," she answered. "Will you put them into my bag, please?" She held the bag wide, and he poured them in. That done, she looked up again and thanked him.

They made formal adieux, and parted. Lucy Gresham to go blithely upon her way; James Lee to go somberly upon his.

Thus, out of the kaleidoscopic pageant of smart shoppers, well-dressed idlers and casual strollers; changing restlessly, charming ever; Chance, that greatest of all stage managers, had brought these two face to face. Yet neither of them guessed that, with the first meeting of their eyes, they had each looked straight into the eyes of Fate.

James Lee's knowledge of this was, however, only postponed until the following evening, when, rather idly turning the pages of a picture paper, his attention was suddenly caught by the face of the little gold-haired girl he had so nearly knocked down with his car, looking out at him from one of the pages.

Next moment he was sitting straight and tense in his chair, and a smothered exclamation left his lips. For, in the pictured group of which the gold-haired girl was the central figure, there were the pictures of two other people. Two men. Two men whose faces were, for overwhelming reasons, branded indelibly upon his memory.

Mechanically, he read the legend beneath the picture, which ran: "A charming picture of Miss Lucy Gresham, whose nineteenth birthday is to be celebrated by a costume ball to be given at her father's town house on the twenty-sixth. She is here seen with her father, Sir John Gresham, and her cousin, Mr. Oliver Ames."

James Lee didn't need to be told who those two men were. All the same he read it again and again, in a sort of stunned surprise, before saying half aloud:

"That's who she is. . . . My G—! If I'd known. . . . And then, slowly, after a pause: "The last three and a half years haven't marked them." The account was bitter. From the faces of the two men, he presently turned his attention to the girl again.

Very young and sweet and happy, her pictured eyes looked up from the page, straight into his; just as yesterday, they had looked, when he stood before her, apologizing for his clumsy driving. Her curling lips smiled, as if even though it was only a picture, she challenged his grimmest with the exquisite young beauty of her.

"So that's who she is," he said to himself again. "I'd forgotten that John Gresham had a daughter. . . . I'd forgotten that. . . ."

"Odd," he thought, "how Fate or Destiny or whatever it is, can knock you down with one hand, and then politely help you to rise with the other. . . . Life's a queer show. . . ."

His attention came back to the picture.

"The last three and a half years haven't changed them much," he thought again. "Old Gresham's a little whiter, perhaps; and Ames, a shade stouter. . . . Otherwise. . . . His thoughts broke off and turned toward himself. If his picture were to appear in the papers, would those two know him as readily as he had known them? Would James Lee of today suggest to them James Warrington of three and a half years ago? He thought not. The last three and a half years had not left him so unaltered.

The door opened and a young man with curly hair, wide eyes, a most engaging grin and Saville row written all over his clothes, came in. This was Peregrine St. Abb, James Lee's secretary, and social guide; and, incidentally, his very sincere friend.

"My dear old sir," said this young man easily. "If you have no use for my valued services between the hours of ten tonight and breakfast time tomorrow, I'd rather like to look in at a 'do' my Aunt Cordelia is giving. She rang me up to say that she's a man about and could. . . ."

"Certainly," broke in Lee and then, after a moment: "Perry, do you know the Greshams?"

"Not frightfully well. . . . I've met his daughter here and there. . . . A plippin, I assure you."

"Yes; I see her here." Lee crossed and handed it to St. Abb. St. Abb—The Honorable Peregrine Maibey de Castells St. Abb, to give him the style to which he had been born—took it and said:

"Oh, she's much better than that in real life. . . . I say, my jolly old sir, you haven't fallen for her, have you? I mean to say, it's no go; she's booked. My Aunt Cordelia told me that this handsome bloke, Ames, has been mad about her ever since she left the nursery, and that papa Gresham is all ready to do the heavy paternal. . . ."

Lee stretched out a hand and took the paper back. "Ames loves her, does he?" he said sharply. Something in his tone made St. Abb look at him a moment, with puzzled, rather boyish eyes. There was something about his chief that he never could get at. There he was, with more money than any man could possibly know what to do with; able to do any mortal thing he liked; only twenty-seven, though he looked a good thirty-five; big, strong, healthy and sweet girl, beloved of Ames, adored by her father, a weapon against them both. . . . Skies above! But he owed them the utmost of suffering that it was in his power to give! . . .

In the flashing of a mere few moments—so incredibly swift is the inner vision—he saw again his boyhood, motherless from his first day of life, and fatherless, too, when he was only just fifteen. He saw his struggle against poverty; his passionate ambition to rise and make a place for himself in this great, working world; all his stumbling, boyish efforts to get on; and that papa Gresham, not a big job, but a beginning; therefore, with a glory all its own, to him.

He remembered how hard and how faithfully he had worked—he had always been made that way—how he had put all his brain and effort into his work; all his heart and soul; all his hopes and ambitions.

And just as it seemed that he really had got a foothold on the difficult ladder of success, he saw again how life had dealt him a blow that shattered, destroyed, laid waste. . . .

How vividly it flashed before him again! A clerk, bringing money for the payroll from the bank, had been set upon, stunned, and robbed of every penny.

Money was a power. He meant to use it. But there had been things to do first. With the changing of his name and fortune, he intended to become a new personality; to raise himself to a level of social equality with those he regarded as his enemies, so that he need be at no sort of disadvantage. With this in view he had advertised for a young man of good social standing to act as secretary and valet; and the answer to this advertisement had been Peregrine St. Abb.

Under the guidance of Peregrine, Lee had installed himself in a fine town flat; taken a nice little country place in Hertfordshire; acquired a splendid car; a big collection of working knowledge of the manners and customs of polite society. . . .

Money was a power, and he meant to use it. But here—and now he came out of the past and let the new and ugly thought have away—here was a power dealer still, with her young, sweet, girlish eyes and pretty, childish lips—where, if he searched the world over, could he find a sharper weapon than she might prove? Her father adored her; that was a fact. And now St. Abb had told him that Ames loved. The two match her from them. . . . He, who had been three years in prison. . . . To snatch her from them. . . . "Old Gresham wouldn't know me anyway. . . ."

He argued to himself. "And I don't think Ames would either. . . . I've changed so. . . . Anyway, being recognized was a risk he was bound to take. . . . There was no avoiding it. . . . And the stake was worth it. His thoughts went on.

"Perry," he said suddenly: "Get me an invitation to this birthday party on the twenty-sixth. . . ."

He tapped the paper. "I want to meet . . . John Gresham's girl. . . ."

Test of Poetry
The true test of poetry is the substance which remains when the poetry is reduced to prose.—Goethe.

Vienna "City of Music"
The peculiar charm of Vienna has caused many a great musician to spend years of his life there. This was true of Gluck, Mozart, Haydn, Beethoven, Schubert, Brahms, Bruckner, Hugo Wolf, Gustav Mahler and Richard Strauss. Many of the modern masters are living there today.

Even church music is great in Vienna. Those who have heard the musical productions in the Augustinerkirche, the cathedral of St. Stephan, and the chapel of the Burg, with its famous boys' choir, or a performance of the Missa Solenne in the little old town of Modling, will never forget the experience.

How the sifting of evidence had been done, Lee had never known, but he remembered his own incredulous bewilderment at hearing that some of the stolen notes had been found in an old leather wallet of his, hidden behind a loose brick in the wall at the end of his garden.

He was called upon to explain, and, in the head office, before that very Oliver Ames whose face looked up at him from the picture in this paper he held now, he made his explanation.

"Do you recognize the wallet?" Across the space of over three years, he could hear Ames' voice again, as clearly as if it were questioning now; at this very moment. . . . And his own voice, replying: "Yes, sir. I lost it some days ago."

"Lost it? When?" "Last Monday, sir."

"Have you mentioned the loss of the wallet to anyone?" "No, sir. And then, after the smallest moment: "Oh, yes, I did just speak of it to Mr. Macklin. . . ."

Next in the panorama of his memories came a vision of Macklin, the foreman, under whom he worked, small and brisk, smart and smiling. Macklin was questioned about the wallet. He said that he had lost it, that this was the first he had heard of it. . . . And he stuck to this through thick and thin.

Then the clerk who had been robbed was unable, when he recovered, to say whether "Warrington" were the thief or not. The onslaught was so swift and sudden. He had just got the impression that the thief had been a very big man. "Warrington" was a very big man. Little by little the not had closed upon him.

He had applied for permission to appeal to old John Gresham, and it was granted, but it did no good. Sir John felt sure that there was no need for him to interfere. He was, moreover, on the point of starting on a yachting cruise with his adored school-girl daughter. He did not alter his plans. . . .

Lee's big hand clenched to a fist as his memory reached that point. . . . With one of his men lying under the threat of terrible disgrace, old Gresham—went yachting!

His memory slid on through his prosecution and trial; through the ghastly nightmare of his own inability to prove his innocence. It was his word against overwhelming evidence, and the evidence won. With his whole soul crying out against the unbelievable injustice of it, he went to prison for three years. For three years that had seemed like three eternities! That was what had knocked the laughter out of his laugh; put the somberness into his thunder-gray eyes, set the line of bitterness around his lips; and, worst of all, brought him back into the world of free men, with all his ambitious energies turned to a burning desire to be revenged; to get even with Ames for his cold willingness to believe him guilty of such a crime; with Macklin for his selfish carelessness.

But as he had said, Fate and Destiny were queer, unaccountable forces, shattering one day, building up the next. He had been free scarcely a fortnight, when he came into an immense fortune left by a cousin, who had died in Canada—one Terence Lee, of whose existence he had scarcely known—the sole condition that he changed his name from Warrington to Lee.

Money was a power. He meant to use it. But there had been things to do first. With the changing of his name and fortune, he intended to become a new personality; to raise himself to a level of social equality with those he regarded as his enemies, so that he need be at no sort of disadvantage. ## IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

(By REV. P. B. FITZWATER, D. D., Member of Faculty, Moody Bible Institute of Chicago.)
(© 1922, Western Newspaper Union.)

Lesson for April 3

GOD IN CREATION

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 1:1-5, 26-31. GOLDEN TEXT—In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. PRIMARY TOPIC—In the beginning—God. JUNIOR TOPIC—God the Creator. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—The Maker of All Things. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—God in Creation.

Genesis, the book from which the lessons of the quarter are taken, as its name indicates, is a book of beginnings. It contains the only reliable information we have of the origin of the heavens and the earth, plant and animal life, human life, human institutions, and human religion. Without it we would be absolutely ignorant as to the origin of these fundamental things. The first chapter of the book from which our lesson is taken is one of the most wonderful in the Bible. Indeed, it is the key to the whole Bible.

I. God (v. 1). He was before all things. He had no beginning. Everything but God had a beginning. God, the uncaused cause, is the cause of all things. "Before the mountains were brought forth or ever thou hadst formed the earth and the world, even from everlasting to everlasting, thou art God" (Ps. 90:2).

II. The Origin of the Universe (v. 1). It was created by God. All things came into being by the will and act of a personal God. The Hebrew word translated "create," according to reliable authority, is the strongest word which the Hebrew language has to express the idea of the origination of substance. The first four words of the Bible exhibit the one fundamental, all-pervasive principle of philosophy of every right life. In the beginning of the universe—God. In the beginning of all science and philosophy—God. In the beginning of every life—God. In the beginning of every year—God. In the beginning of every day—God. In the beginning of every business—God. In the beginning of every human relationship—God. In the beginning of every thought—God.

III. The Degeneration of the Earth (v. 2). Between verses one and two is a clearly marked interval of perhaps long duration. The earth which was created by God was later overtaken in a cataclysmic judgment. The Hebrew word for "was" might just as well have been translated "became." Instead, therefore, the earth having been created a void or chaos, we see that it became chaos through a judgment. In Isaiah 45:18 the prophet expressly declares that God did not create the earth a waste, but that he formed it to be inhabited.

IV. The Regeneration of the Earth (vv. 3-25). As previously noted, the second verse of Genesis does not describe the state of the earth when it first came from the Creator's hands, but a changed condition which took place subsequent thereto. The following verses reveal a new effort of creative power by which the earth is again fitted up for the habitation of man. The power active in this reorganization is the Holy Spirit. On the first day the voice of the Almighty was heard saying, "Let there be light," and the darkness was dispelled by the light.

In the second day the expanse or firmament was made which separates the waters above the firmament from those below it. The third day dry land appeared clothed with vegetation. The fourth day witnessed the appearance of the lightholders, the sun, moon, and stars. They were not created then, but set free from darkness and ruin. On the fifth day fish and birds were created and on the sixth day cattle, creeping things, beasts of the field, and man.

V. The Origin of Man (vv. 26-31). He was created by God. This precludes the foolish idea that man descended from or through the brute. He came into being through a special creative act of God. This image and likeness is not physical or bodily, but intellectual and moral (Eph. 4:24; Col. 3:10). God's likeness is reflected in man's three-fold nature. Man is spirit, soul, and body (1 Thess. 5:23). As there is a trinity and unity in God so there is a trinity in man. Spirit is that part of man by which he has the power to know God. Soul is self-conscious life, the seat of man's emotions and desires. The body is the seat of the senses, enabling man to have world consciousness. God made man to be a personality capable of having fellowship with himself, and with whom he could share his glory.

Song of Peace
The belfries of all Christendom now roll along the unbroken song of peace on earth, good will to men!—Longfellow.

Paths to Triumph
"God's trials nobly borne in obedience to his righteous will are the path to victorious triumph."

A Favorable Light
Faith takes in a favorable light even what seems adverse.—Bengel.

CHILD need REGULATING?

CASTORIA WILL DO IT!

When your child needs regulating, remember this: the organs of babies and children are delicate. Little bowels must be gently urged—never forced. That's why Castoria is used by so many doctors and mothers. It is specially made for children's ailments; contains no harsh, harmful drugs, no narcotics. You can safely give it to young infants for colic pains. Yet it is an equally effective regulator for older children. The next time your child has a little cold or fever, or a digestive upset, give him the help of Castoria, the children's own remedy. Genuine Castoria always has the name:

It's Being Done
"Can the leopard change its spots?"
"That's the furrier's biz."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

It isn't what a man gives but the way he gives it that shows his true character.

Picking at nostrils. Gritting the teeth. Loss of appetite. These are symptoms of worms. Rid your child's body of these ruinous parasites that sap health and strength. Give Comstock's Dead Shot Worm Pellets. Prepared like confections. Children take them without suspecting treatment.

Joseph Shull Has Strange Experience

Spends Most Of Day On Barn Roof In Cold After Wind Blows Ladder Away

(News-Tribune—March 24)

These are the days that strange and weird happenings are being recorded constantly, and the Coburntown neighborhood is in line with one that can hold its head up with the best of them.

In the Coburntown neighborhood, which is in DeKalb county, perhaps five miles from Hicksville, reside Mr. and Mrs. Joseph F. Shull, pioneer citizens of that locality, and widely known and esteemed.

Mr. Shull is eighty-one years old, and going strong, which fact would make it right to say eighty-one years young.

He gets about the place like a youngster, and apparently the younger folks have nothing on him when it comes to general activity.

Thursday of last week, mighty cold and a freezing high wind from the west, Mr. Shull noticed that the same wind had disturbed some shingles on the roof of the large farm barn.

With Mr. Shull to see to it, the word procrastination not being in his dictionary.

He accordingly stacked a ladder against the barn and made his way to the much exposed roof and put the offending shingles back into position.

He then started to descend to the ground, when he made the astonishing discovery that the pesky wind had blown the ladder down. This was about 9:30 in the forenoon.

Noon came, and the good wife missed him, but being accustomed to his youthful capers and frisking about the farm, and not seeing him anywhere, she worried some but figured that he would appear in due time, all O. K.

In the meantime Mr. Shull found a secure place to roost on the roof, and put in his time shivering and waving at passing cars. Many drivers noticed him, but took his motions for his usual friendly greeting, and waving at him, passed on their way.

It was near four o'clock when he finally succeeded in getting a machine to stop and come up close to hear above the wind what he had to say between his chattering teeth.

The ladder was placed in position and the aged prisoner landed safely.

It took him some time to get thawed out, but he accomplished the act with the aid of a good, warm supper provided by the astonished wife, and he was soon able to see the funny part of his escapade and get a good laugh out of it.

This goes to show that it pays to keep young, even if you are eighty-one years and occasionally, as a result, have to roost on the roof of the barn.

LOWER VALUATIONS EXPECTED IN ASSESSMENT

A loss of at least 30 per cent in the total valuation of taxables in DeKalb county was forecast Monday by County Assessor Chas. Miser.

Following conferences with farm bureau committees from each township that have been in progress for more than a week, the township assessors have started the work of appraising real estate. The average decrease as compared with 1928, when the last assessment of real estate took place, will be 30 to 40 per cent, according to indications. This reduction will apply not only to farm land, but also to city and town property.

A like loss in personal property assessment also is predicted.

The total of all taxables last year was $40,980,030. A 30 per cent cut would amount to more than $12,000,000. This will precipitate a problem for the local officials in compiling for the year 1933 and may prove a serious dilemma for some of the units, especially schools. A certain number of the units will doubtless be able to make drastic cuts in their budgets to meet the reduction in valuations without a raise in the levies, but others will find an increase in the levy inescapable.

CONCORD

Dell Draggoo is able to be out and around again.

Mrs. John Fettes is among the sick with cold and cough.

Orin Rude is working at the Auburn, being called back Tuesday.

Easter services were quite well given, mostly children taking part.

Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Draggoo and family were shoppers at Fort Wayne Saturday.

Mrs. Less Sebring and son, Jervie and family were callers Sunday in the Ford Jackson home.

Virgil Bassett purchased a nice young team last week and expects to go into the farming business.

Dorothy Littlefield and her father are both sick this week. Sarah is able to be up and around the house.

Stella and Ilif Goings were home over Easter, with their parents. They each have work in Fort Wayne.

L. G. Fettes and mother, Mrs. John Fettes, attended the funeral of a cousin at Ney, Ohio, one day last week.

Master Dale Keeler, of St. Joe spent from Friday until Sunday with his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs. Ira Bone.

Mrs. Fred Keller is one among the sick this week. They called a doctor Sunday, and she is a little better at this writing.

Mr. and Mrs. Carl Perkins, Mrs. Chas. Jackson and daughter, Mable, and Mr. and Mrs. Ford Jackson and daughter, Iris took Sunday dinner with Bert Jackson.

Mrs. Jennie Ricker went recently to visit another son, in Ohio. She expects to spend a few months with a son and family.

On Friday of last week Mr. and Mrs. James Wyatt, Mrs. Harry Gill and Mrs. Mattie Anderson, of Auburn spent the day with Mr. and Mrs. Ira Bone, the ladies helping quilt. In the afternoon Mrs. Mary Krise and Mrs. Hattie Draggoo fell in line and helped to quilt.

PEARL COCHRAN GIVEN DIVORCE BY COURT

The fourth time the marital career of Charles A. Cochran and his wife, Pearl, was disturbed by divorce proceedings proved the climax, Judge Endicott granting a decree to Mrs. Cochran Thursday.

Both were asking for a divorce. Cochran filed a complaint and his wife submitted a cross-complaint. The husband testified that he and his wife quarreled over money. They were operating a restaurant in St. Joe and he said that one day she chased him upstairs with a butcher knife. He also claimed that on another occasion she chopped down a door with an axe while they were quarreling. Cochran testified that he and his wife had trouble over other men. One night, he said, he saw Marshal Williams of St. Joe, in the back yard of the restaurant and Cochran said he shot to frighten Williams.

Mrs. Cochran denied, however, that she was unfaithful.

The couple own real estate at St. Joe jointly for which they paid $575 and on which there is $100 mortgage. They also owned some household furniture and restaurant fixtures, but there are some $150 debts outstanding. The dispute concerning the division of the property was settled by the court awarding Cochran the restaurant fixtures, charging the debts against him and ordering him to pay $50 for the fee of his wife's attorney and giving her the household goods. The real estate will probably be sold and the balance after paying the mortgage will be equally divided.

The couple were married in 1897 and separated the last time on April 1, 1931. Captain H. C. Springer is attorney for Cochran and Howard S. Grimm represents his wife.

RECEIVES APPOINTMENT

Ray Reasoner was appointed Saturday in the DeKalb circuit court as administrator of the estate of the late Celesta Reasoner of St. Joe, who died November 8, 1925. There is $1,500 in real estate and the heirs are the widow, Chalmers Reasoner, of Butler, and four children, Herman Reasoner, of Fort Wayne, Ray Reasoner and Effie Collins of St. Joe and Bert Reasoner of Geneva, Ind. The administrator filed $100 bond, with F. R. Bowman and E. R. Kinsey as sureties.

AUBURN TO HAVE A NEW STORE

Paul Krise, son of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Krise, of near Concord, who has been manager of the radio, refrigerator and washing machine department for Dilgard Bros. for nearly two years, and Herbert Schenker, a member of the staff of the Auburn branch of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. have formed a partnership and will open an exclusive haberdashery store for men in the south side of the room occupied by E. W. Hicks, jeweler, on Main street. The new firm expects to open in two weeks with a complete stock of men's furnishings, made-to-measure clothes and shoes.

TO OPEN LIBRARY

The Boy Scouts are planning on starting a library in the Scout Room over Hurn's Grocery. Any one having books that they would like to donate please notify Mark Williams or Joe Woodcox. If they succeed in getting enough books the library will be open to the public.

FUNERAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mr. Nelson Tustison, an aged resident of this community, died Tuesday night at the home of his son, Frank Tustison, east of town, after a lingering illness. Funeral will be held from the Lutheran Church Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock. The body will be removed from the Kinsey funeral home to the son's home Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock and will lie in state until funeral hour. The family requests no flowers.

Rolling clouds of smoke, flames lighting the sky and the clang and bustle of fire apparatus were the sedatives which quieted the jumpy nerves of Herman Jessee, 26 years old, of Indianapolis. Jessee admitted in a confession last week that he set fire to thirty-two vacant houses in seven months. He always managed to start the fires under cover, allowing him ample time to get out of sight, before the fire became noticed. Jessee seemed to be present at a number of the night fires, which gave suspicion to the firemen and he was arrested and confessed.

Luther Shoemaker, aged 51, driver of the bus, apparently failed to see the danger signal at the crossing and drove the bus into

FIVE RECENT RURAL FIRES IN COUNTY

DeKalb county has suffered a number of rural fires of late. The Cecil Metcalf home, 6 1/2 miles east of Auburn, burned to the ground Saturday night about 7 o'clock. The house was a two story frame, and was in excellent condition. The tenant had moved from the farm and Mr. Metcalf was preparing to move there in another week. The fire started in the attic. The loss is estimated at $3,500 with $2,800 insurance. The home will be rebuilt. Other recent rural fires were Ivan Culbertson, Newman Heffley and John Kettle.

Monday afternoon the Simon Smurr farm home was burned to the ground. The fire caught near the flue upstairs. Practically everything was lost.

SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS HOLD MEETING IN AUBURN

Every township in DeKalb county except two was represented Sunday afternoon at a meeting of workers in the children's department of the DeKalb County Council of Religious Education at the First Presbyterian Church. Seventy-five workers were in attendance.

Miss Nellie C. Young, of Indianapolis, state children's worker, gave the address on "Jesus' Method of Teaching."

Mrs. Gertrude Borthwick, of St. Joe, the county superintendent of the children's division presided and Rev. Cormican, of Butler township, led the devotionals. One of the pleasing musical numbers was by a ladies trio of Butler. Mrs. Hilda Funk, of Butler, was the pianist.

TAXES TO BE COLLECTED THIS YEAR

A statement prepared by the Indiana Taxpayers Association shows that the per capita cost of taxes in DeKalb county levied in 1931 for collection in 1932 is $39.27. The state average is $43.25. The highest in the state is Porter county, with $70.71. The lowest is Crawford county, with $18.98. Allen county's per capita cost is $47.67; Noble, $45.26; Steuben, $44.38; LaGrange, $45.18; Whitley, $47.61.

The association also has a table showing the amount levied for road maintenance, road bonds and interest payable this year. The total in DeKalb county is $243,597.95, which is 24.9 per cent of all taxes levied in the county. The road repair fund to

SLUMP IN GAS TAX SHOWN

For the first time in the history of the state's gasoline tax department, collections for the last month showed a decrease instead of an increase. The totals for the month have soared by leaps and bounds until the report issued Thursday for the month of February which showed a decline of $35,863.78. The total receipts were $1,154,096.44 for the last month and $1,189,960.22 for the corresponding month a year ago.

The decrease in gallonage was 573,596, with the total for the past month 28,911,385, and that for the same month last year 29,489,981. State officials had anticipated a shrink in the receipts because of the drop in the issuance of automobile license plates of approximately 20 per cent over last year.

LADIES LITERARY CLUB

The Ladies Literary Club was delightfully entertained last Wednesday evening at the home of Mrs. B. O. Shook, at Spencerville. The subject for the evening study was "Indiana," led by Mrs. Lela Northrup and Mrs. Delora Curie. Everyone appreciated brushing up on the historical facts of the state, as well as learning many new things concerning state charities, schools, parks, scenery, cities, etc.

After the study hour the hostess provided several bits of unusual entertainment, which were enjoyed immensely. Following these, a very delicious two-course luncheon was served, after which the guests took their leave, proclaiming Mrs. Shook an exceedingly satisfactory hostess.

Guests from Spencerville were, Mrs. Pauline Baumgartner, Mrs. Golden High, Mrs. Jennie Walter, Mrs. Zelpha Steward, Mrs. Violette Erick and Mrs. Goldie Shutt. Mrs. J. C. Hull and Mrs. J. P. Buckingham, of St. Joe were also present.

MRS. MARTHA MISER DIES OF PARALYSIS

Funeral services for Mrs. Martha Miser, who died at Waterloo Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock from paralysis, was held Sunday afternoon from the Waterloo United Brethren Church, Rev. Ernest Lewellyn and Rev. C. M. Eberly officiating. Burial took place in the cemetery at Waterloo.

Mrs. Miser was 82 years of age on April 17, 1931. Until stricken she had never been sick before and she led an unusually active life.

While visiting at the home of her son, Edward V. Miser at Garrett, she was stricken with paralysis six weeks ago. Three weeks ago she was removed to her home at Waterloo but did not improve. She is survived by five sons, Charles, Miser of Waterloo, DeKalb county assessor; Martin A. of Waterloo; Edward V. of Garrett; Burleigh L. of Montpelier, Ohio; and Walter B. of Amarillo, Texas. There also survive eight grandchildren, six of whom, the grandsons, acted as pallbearers. There are four great grandchildren.

Mrs. Miser had been a member of the U. B. Church for many years.

TUSTISON

Nelson, second son of Washington and Catharine Cox Tustison, was born in Allen County near Huntertown, Indiana, February 10, 1849 and departed this life on March 29, 1932, age 83 years, 1 month and 19 days. He was of a family of eight children, five sisters and three brothers, all deceased except one brother, Charles A. Tustison, who makes his home with his two sons at Defiance and Hicksville, Ohio.

On January 23, 1873 he was united in marriage to Susan A. Baker, who preceded him in death July 10, 1913. To this union four children were born, Minnie Ulm, who lives in Spencer Township, John Tustison, deceased, Frank Tustison living on the home farm, and George W., who died January 2, 1887 at the age of 16 months. Besides his own children he took a nephew, Foraker Ferrell and kept him until he grew to manhood.

He has been a cripple the greater part of his life suffering from varicose ulcer on his limb. After having his sore limb amputated he fell and broke the hip of his sound limb on October 1, 1928, which made him a helpless invalid until the end. With all his suffering he tried to be cheerful and was a great lover of home and was better contented there than anywhere.

He leaves to mourn his departure two children, one daughter-in-law, nine grandchildren and four great grandchildren and a host of friends.

Funeral services were conducted from the Lutheran Church at St. Joe, Friday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. A. K. Mumma of Harlan, a former pastor officiating. Burial was made in Riverside cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our thanks to our many friends for their expressions of sympathy in the passing of our Father.

KAELLNER

Margaret Kaellner, daughter of Peter and Katherine Shoup, was born in Crawford County, Ohio, October 16, 1850, and departed this life March 31, 1932, aged 81 years, 6 months and 15 days, at the home of her daughter in Detroit.

She was married to Charles Kaellner August 28, 1870. To this union were born five children, three sons and two daughters, nine grandchildren and seven great grandchildren. A sister and many friends are left to mourn their loss. She was a kind and loving mother.

She gave her heart to God when a young girl, joining the U. B. Church in Ohio, and lived a faithful christian life until death.

The funeral service was held from the Lutheran Church Sunday afternoon, with Rev. A. K. Mumma, of Harlan officiating. Interment made in Riverside cemetery.

CARD OF THANKS

We wish to express our thanks to our relatives, neighbors and friends for their kindness and sympathy during the death and burial of our Mother. Also for floral offerings.

ELECTRIC ENERGY
DOOMS BIG CITIESRedistribution of Industry
Seen by Harper Leech.

New York.—Giant cities will grow no larger and will lose their present financial and industrial importance; industry will break up into smaller units and move into what are now rural districts; the worker will receive a greater share of his employer's profits in order to maintain buying power; and the cost of killing a Chinaman will jump from about fifty dollars, the present level, to approximately $17,500, all in the comparatively near future, and because mankind has discarded human and animal energy based on food cultivation and substituted for it his newly discovered ability to convert solar energy into work, principally in the form of electric power. These are some of the predictions affecting the welfare of humanity made by Harper Leech, writer on economic subjects, in his new book "The Paradox of Plenty."

That "this is not a depression but a misreading of the greatest era of plenty the world has ever known," is the thesis of Mr. Leech's book. "The plain fact is," he says in his preface, "that after thousands, perhaps millions, of years of living on the energy grudgingly tendered by the sun through annual harvests of crops, man suddenly became aware that the same sun had been storing energy for millions of years. He discovered in coal an energy store with millions of times the energy available from his own muscles. Nearly two hundred years later, he still thinks of 'scarcity' when there is no scarcity. And, failing to adjust his institutions and his financial mechanisms to the conditions of plenty, he has failed to realize the advantages of plenty."

Transformation of the United States.

The transformation of the United States into a new form of industrial society, through the interconnection of electric power and transmission of energy, has already started, according to Mr. Leech, and "is now proceeding as rapidly as the previous political and economic interconnection of America by railroad construction."

Mr. Leech points to recent developments in the Carolinas as typical of what may be expected of the future industrialism of the United States in the wake of its constantly expanding use of electrical energy. "In the Piedmont region of the Carolinas," he writes, "the first quarter of the Twentieth century witnessed a repetition of the industrial revolution of the Eighteenth century in the north of England. There was the same shift from agriculture and cottage industries to factories, but no growth of cities to correspond to the growth of the steam-generated Babylons like Manchester, Leeds, Pittsburgh or Chicago, which gathered into themselves the great constructive forces of the Nineteenth century."

"The new type of industrialism which is seen in most characteristic form in the Carolinas has been subjected to much criticism. But it brought to the inhabitants of those regions a far greater net gain of income and welfare than came to the people who lived through the great transitions from agriculture to factory life in regions of earlier industrial maturity. Whether urban critics like it or not—the Carolinas today are a prototype of the future industrialism of America."

The mammoth metropolises of the modern world already show signs of overgrowth and overspecialization, which in the long run foretell the doom of a species.

"Because of the congestion in cities, there has been built up a complex system of distribution. There are brokers, jobbers, wholesalers, and warehouse men, all adding tremendously to the expense of transportation and handling.

"Superficially, the greater per capita consumption of electricity in cities would indicate higher living standards than in small communities with a lower per capita consumption, but much of the urban use of electricity goes merely to level up the city dweller's plane of life to that already enjoyed by the inhabitant of the smaller community without recourse to electrical or mechanical power."

Mr. Leech points out in his book that the vastly increased ability to produce agricultural and other products that electrical energy has placed in the hands of men has destroyed completely the promise that scarcity is a measure of value. With the energy now available, he says, it takes but a small proportion of the population to supply the essential needs of the whole nation.

Therefore, he adds, there can be no scarcity, and scarcity ceases to be a measure of value.

In conclusion Mr. Leech strikes a note of optimism for the future of the United States and its citizens, and for western civilization as a whole. "Slowly," he declares, "the force of economic and technical realities has been removing from the throat of western mankind, the dead hand of obsolete economic doctrine. The evidence is unmistakable that humanity can escape from the prison house of want; and, although still rubbing eyes blinded from long confinement in the dungeon, can now see a new world. With famine vanquished and other forms of privation being rapidly diminished, old faiths born of want and fear have been losing force."

Colorado's Sand Dunes
Attract Many Tourists

Alamosa, Colo.—Colorado's sand dunes, unique wonders of nature in a land that knows more of rock than sand, are attracting thousands of tourists and westerners by their beauty.

The great rolling hills of sand, swept smooth by the winds, have become a pleasure spot.

Where an inland sea once roiled, the big dunes now attract skiers. So smooth is the sand that skis can be used on the hills as though they were snow.

Unhindered for years, the scenic beauties of the dunes have been broadcast recently and they have shown promise of rivaling as an attraction the mountains of rock that have made Colorado famous.

PILOTS OFFER TO FIGHT FOR CHINAAmericans and Canadians Seek Foreign Service.

Ottawa, Ont.—American and Canadian air fighters, some of them with twenty and thirty machines to their credit in the great war, may soon be zooming through Asiatic skies helping the Chinese to throw back the Japanese forces.

Since eighty experienced Royal Canadian air force pilots offered their services in a body through Chinese consul general for Canada, Tchuin Li, a number of American air pilots have expressed desires to join them. One of the American even offers to pay his own way to China. Recently Mr. Li received from the Chinese Nationalist government at Nanking a cablegram indicating that there is a probability of their enlistment offers being accepted.

The cablegram received by the Chinese consul general is in response to his cabled report of the enlistment offer of the experienced Canadian flyers. It says that the Chinese government's aviation department finds the proposal "interesting" and welcomes the idea of having experienced aviators from the Occident fight under the Chinese Nationalist flag.

It will be necessary, however, the cablegram states, for the Chinese aviation department to give full consideration to the detailed report of the proposals, now in the mails on its way to China, before definite answer can be given. According to the Canadian air force spokesman, who, because of Canadian government opposition to the move cannot reveal his identity, the Canadian proposals should reach Nanking about the middle of March.

"We are planning a organization," he said, "so that we can start immediately upon receipt of favorable definite reply from the Chinese government."

The Canadians say they are prepared to equip and man two squadrons, one pursuit and one bombing, at a cost to the Chinese government for the first year of nine million dollars. Each succeeding year would cost but four millions. If necessary the airmen say they can equip two or more squadrons of eighteen machines each. There are about 400 pilots and mechanics affected by the Royal Canadian air force layoff.

Sidewalk Repairs Give Work to Unemployed Men

Chicago.—Fixing up sidewalks seems to be a popular means of providing emergency employment, according to information received from various sections of the country. Cleveland, Ohio, has kept an extra force of from 200 to 500 men at work during the past few months, replacing damaged sections of sidewalk throughout the city.

Other reports of similar projects have come from many other communities.

Various means of financing the repairs have been reported. In Macomb, Ill., men repairing walks are paid by the local unemployment bureau, and the only cost to the city is for materials and supervision. Under this plan jobless men "work out" what they get from funds donated for unemployment relief, and the city as a whole receives the benefit.

Construction Bargains
Seen in Lowered Costs

Chicago.—That construction bargains abound for people who will take advantage of them and build this year, is indicated by prices on contracts recently awarded. A good example is the concrete swimming pool for which a contract has just been let in Oak Park, Ill., at a cost of only $1,000.

Two pools of similar design which Oak Park built in 1922 cost the community $2,400 each. In 1923, the price had dropped to $1,450 each for two more swimming pools installed. But the 1922 low bid was more than 30 per cent under the successful bid in 1923.

Spring Coat Fashions Go Military

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

FASHION'S followers are sure going "on parade" this season, all dressed up in red, white and blue with brass buttons and epaulettes 'n' everything that's military. It's quite exciting, this patriotic gesture of the mode. Even the very fabrics which go to make our apparel have been designed to commemorate the George Washington bicentennial celebration. In that the motifs of the newest silk prints center about the famous cherry tree incident, while stars and stripes and tricolors and kindred items enter the scheme of things.

But that is another story which has to do with spring weaves. What we started to talk about is the latest, smartest coats which have such a military bearing they quite overawe one, being so broad shouldered and all a glitter with nickel or brass buttons and the like.

Perhaps the most outstanding reaction to this martial spirit which is pervading the style realm is the importance of blues in the color range, very keen blues some of them, for the spring coat. Most military in matter of color and all other details as well, is the coat shown to the right in the picture. It's color combination is bright navy lined with military red, the huge shining nickel buttons contributing their share of pomp and glory.

You should see the coat pictured to the left in its original color, for it is bright red—red corduroy. If you please, for corduroy has come back and there is no mistake about it. This model is for a young girl. In a more conservative color, say the new beige, it would be wearable for any age. Designers are using corduroy for most everything, for the swaggy little bell hop jackets for women costumes, for sports dresses and suits with lots of white corduroy in prospect for summer wear. As to the coat mentioned, the diagonal lines of brass buttons dramatize its broad shoulders, while its trim, narrow waistline emphasizes the military mode that is scheduled to lead in the Easter style program. Note, too, its collarless neckline which is a style feature worthy of comment, since many coats are sans collars so as to make way for these "nifty" separate fur neckpieces which fashion has planned for us.

A new treatment inspired by the general trend manifests itself in the use of considerable military braid, applied in rows, or perhaps for epaulet shoulder effects as well as many other attractive expressions. So, if you like braid trimmings, the hour has come to indulge your fancy. Suits as well as coats show this ornamentation.

It is very evident that the military spirit has pervaded every realm of fashion, from knitted wear to furs. The former adapts, for instance, the tri-color schemes which are so exceedingly popular, with double-breasted treatments employing flashing metal buttons. Then there's the new scarfs flaunting their reds, whites and blues via all sorts of whimsical stripes, stars and other design.

The little short spring jackets developed of gray kidskin accented with nickel buttons are a possession to be coveted, seeing that they blend with current fashions of military aspect.

And have you seen the detachable military capes which are of fur or of cloth and which boast of buttons in rows according to the latest dictate of fashion.

Dresses are military minded also in that many of them are fashioned of blue sheer woolen with trimmings of red and white print silk.

CHIC LACY MESH
By CHERIE NICHOLAS

No, this very pretty and very chic afternoon dress is not lace. It's a young and extremely popular first cousin to lace. The technical name is durable cotton lacy mesh. This knit weave of softly lustrous durable is of diagonal construction. The designer of the frock has furthered the diagonal feeling through clever handling of the stripes. A dull suede belt contrasts the subtle luster of the material. The scarf is tied to give a cowl neckline which to slender faces is amazingly becoming.

The New Cottons

In material, cotton has been raised from humble rank to high favor. Printed cottons are shown for dresses, blouses and coat linings. Cotton day dresses are found in open weaves. Flannel, wool and some boucle are seen in daytime costumes.

"HOW JOHN SAVES MONEY . . . AND LIKES IT . . . !"

IN hard times it's possible to make a husband save money. But it's hard to make him like it. I've found a way.

"John used to smoke at least a package of ready-made cigarettes a day. I suggested that he roll his own, when hard times came. He sneered at the idea.

"I bought a package of Target and made him try it. Now he says he won't smoke anything else, because Target is real cigarette tobacco, just like the ready-mades use. He says those forty gummed papers you get free with every package would make any dub a good cigarette roller.

"Well, John's happy, and I'm happy, and we save at least 50¢ a week."

AND GET THIS: The U. S. Government Tax on 20 cigarettes amounts to 6¢. On 20 cigarettes you roll from Target Tobacco the tax is just about 1¢. No wonder you get such value for a dime!

STOP RHEUMATIC PAINS WITH HEAT OF RED PEPPERS

Relieves Almost Instantly
Good old Nature has put into red peppers a marvelous therapeutic heat that gets right down to the source of trouble and almost instantly relieves the pains and aches of rheumatism, stiff joints, lumbago and neuritis. Thousands have found it the one safe guard against chest colds, too. Now this genuine red pepper heat is contained in an ointment that you just rub on. In less than 3 minutes you feel relief come. It is called Rowles Red Pepper Rub. Safe. Will not burn or sting. Get a small jar from your druggist.

A man may as well work at something as sit and idly think about most of the things he thinks about.

STOP THAT COLD

DISTRESSING cold in chest or throat—that so often leads to something serious—generally responds to good old Musterole with the first application. Should be more effective if used once every hour for five hours. This famous blend of oil of mustard, camphor, menthol and other helpful ingredients brings relief naturally. Musterole gets action because it is a scientific "counter-irritant"—not just a salve—it penetrates and stimulates blood circulation, helps to draw out infection and pain. Used by millions for 20 years. Recommended by doctors and nurses. To Mothers—Musterole is also made in milder form for babies and small children. Ask for Children's Musterole.

Whale Tows Smack,
Tears Off Anchor

Cape May, N. J.—Capt. Esau Boies, master of the Sea Toy, a fishing smack that sails out of this harbor, returned to port, reporting he had run into a school of whales, and that one of them had yanked the anchor off his boat. According to Captain Boies, who is a testator and a member of the Methodist church, he dropped anchor off Chincoteague, Va., in search of codfish, but his anchor caught in the stomach of a whale, apparently annoying the leviathan intensely. The big sea animal dragged his smack back and forth, Captain Boies declares, until he was almost ready to cut the anchor cable. Then the whale jerked the anchor loose and spared him the trouble.

Health and Happiness via Home Garden Route

Hot Bed Time Is Here

By T. E. MYERS, County Agricultural Agent of DeKALB COUNTY

You can always work off a little of that extra "steam" by starting the early garden operations under a frame or two of glass. With sash and glass prices reduced, the cost will be low. Perhaps, around somewhere there is an old window sash that can be "drafted" into the garden service for "1932." If the experiment under glass is a success more elaborate arrangements may be made for another year.

Not only will you be able to raise your own cabbage, cauliflower, head lettuce, tomato, pepper and sweet potato plants that you may later transplant to the garden, but you can grow a few radishes and some lettuce a month to six weeks earlier than you could outdoors—a welcome addition to the spring menu. In the fall the frame and sash may be used as a cold frame to grow lettuce, radishes and spinach.

Bank the frame around the edges with soil or manure, put on your sash, and allow the temperature to run up, then recede until 80 to 85 degrees is reached; it is then safe to plant your seeds.

The hotbed should be located in a well-drained spot, with the front toward the south so as to get full benefit from the sun, and protected from the cold northwest winds by the house, fence or shrubbery.

The frame is usually made of two inch boards, the back board 18 inches high, the front one 12 inches high, with the sides sloping accordingly; old lumber of almost any size may be used. The sash may be made at home, it is more satisfactory, and practically as cheap, to buy them ready made from the local dealer.

New Soil For Old In Hotbeds

The old gardener reminds us that the wise gardener will change the soil in the hotbed each year. Of course, if no disease shows up on the plants from the hotbed, the same soil may be used year after year; but sooner or later trouble will come from repeatedly using the same soil.

Many diseases, such as cabbage yellows, tomato wilt and leaf spot are started in the hotbed, and after the soil becomes infested there it remains diseased for several years and serves as a means of distributing disease from year to year.

If you have had trouble with your cabbage, tomatoes or other transplanted seeds, change the soil in the hotbed, using rich, loose, new soil. Then, by using a different place in the garden for these crops or using disease resistant strains, less trouble will be incurred.

Do not put the infested soil in your garden.

Potatoes From Your Garden

Last summer at one side of the garden, twelve rows 150 feet long produced twenty-three bushels of large, high quality spuds and insured the family against a "spud" shortage. Real potatoes are easily grown in or out of the garden, if you make the old potato right at home and provide the luxury of comfortable living quarters.

More gardeners might do the same and produce a good supply of potatoes on a very small patch. To get started right, one must have real potato seed stock of the right varieties. For the early plantings nothing can be better than Early Ohio or Irish Cobbler from selected seed. To be sure of getting this real seed stock insist on "certified" seed or seed that comes with a tag of inspection on the bag, which guarantees the potatoes therein to be healthy, true to name and to have come from a good producing quality of spuds, a family on whose ancestry a gardener can look with a feeling of confidence.

This good seed should only be planted on well enriched garden soil. Make sure this is rich by adding, during the winter, stable manure at the rate of five or six bushels to the square rod. This is best turned under during the winter or early spring. At the earliest possible time, the potatoes should be planted in this well prepared soil.

Pieces the size of an egg should be planted in hills 15x24 inches. After the potatoes are up an occasional spraying with Bordeaux mixture, plus lead arsenate with frequent light shallow cultivations will usually bring a good crop of real potatoes.

A NORMAL child has a wonderful gift of imagination. If properly trained this same gift will make a most helpful quality in a housekeeper and cook.

The happy cook who enjoys her work will always be on the alert to find new ways of serving foods to make them more attractive to those she serves. "Everything is fish that comes to her net." This is the kind of information that all cooks are seeking—more ways of serving the same old things.

For example, a can of peas will not call forth much enthusiasm, but just drain the can into a shallow baking dish, season with salt, pepper, a bit of sugar and several pieces of butter, then add half a dozen slices of bacon cooked and cut fine, one cupful of cream or canned milk, cover with buttered crumbs and brown in a hot oven and see how quickly that food will disappear. It will be different and so interesting.

Remember—to scallop oysters never have more than two layers, keep plenty of moisture and season with pepper, butter, lemon juice and salt, with cracker crumbs between and on top.

If the gravy is not brown enough add a teaspoonful of browned sugar, or keep a bottle of the caramel for such occasions. This adds to the color but does not sweeten.

Wrapping a fowl in cheesecloth when boiling not only makes the meat more tender, but the dark meat is more moist and is as tender as the white.

Before molding an aspic or jelly, oil the mold; it not only removes easier but it gives it that beautiful glass so desired.

An aspic is not such a difficult dish to prepare with canned soup of beef or chicken; add gelatin and set away to mold. A bit of onion juice will improve most such dishes. Jellyed vegetable soups make fine salads treated in this way.

My Neighbor

Says:

WHEN making jams be careful that only dry fruit is used. If it is wet there will be difficulty in keeping the jam and it will become moldy very quickly. Boil the fruit as soon as possible after gathering.

If new enameled saucepans are placed in a pan of warm water and allowed to come to a boil they will last much longer without cracking or burning, than if they are used immediately.

Sweet potato croquettes are very good served with chops or patties.

Discarded flatirons with iron handles, if painted with a bright-colored enamel, make excellent book racks.

The Seraphina Story

Although not far from five years old, Sweet Seraphina Stone had never, never liked to stay all by her very lone.

She was frightened in the city, of noises near and loud; Of each big, kind policeman; of every running crowd.

She was frightened in the country, of gentle cows or sheep; Of all the things that fly about and all the things that creep.

Our Seraphina who should be so happy at her play Was filled with foolish worries by night as well as day!

She wanted Mother near her, forever ever near; But Mother knew it was not best for Seraphina dear.

So one night just at candle-light, before she went to bed, Dear Mother talked to Seraphina and this is what she said:

"My daughter dear, you must not fear the things you find about you, For fear comes from within your heart and not from things about you.

So Seraphina went to sleep, safe in the kindly dark. And all next day, at work or play, was happy as a lark.

She handed grass to brown-eyed cows, beside the big barn door. They gently thanked her, saying "Moo," then said "Moo, Moo," for more!

She put her hands between the bars and patted woolly sheep. While joyful lambskins jumped about with many a skip and leap.

And once when a small spider came and sat down by her side, With Ducky-Daddies cheering quite quickly the while.

Her giggling, woolly pup-dog was filled with wild delight. He romped and strolled, he ran and rolled, with all his main and might.

Dear-Dolly-Deer and Teddykins smiled many a wide, wide smile. With Ducky-Daddies cheering quite quickly the while.

That night was planned on Seraphina a silver star that shone. "A badge of courage," Mother said, "For BRAVE Seraphina Stone!"

Questions:
1. What makes the Northern Lights?
2. Why do some animals see in the dark when we can't?
3. Why is it warmer in the summer than in the winter?
4. Why is a cat's tongue prickly?
5. It is true that soft-shelled crabs and hard-shelled crabs are really the same?

Answers:
1. The Northern Lights, otherwise called the Aurora Borealis, are made by some sort of a discharge of electricity into the atmosphere. This discharge may come from the sun.
2. Because the pupils of the eyes of those animals open much more widely than the pupils of the human eye.
3. It is warmer in summer because the sun is higher in the heavens than it is in the winter and its rays are therefore more direct; and then also because the days are longer and the earth has more chance to store up heat during the day.
4. So the cat can lick the meat off the bones he eats.
5. Yes, the hard-shell crabs shed their shells every once in a while, and when they first pull out from the old shell, the new shell is soft. In a few hours the new shell is as hard as the old.

Aged Italian Arranged Plans for Own Death

Parma, Italy.—Girolamo Piarra, eighty-eight, feeling himself near death, dressed in his best, and visited the parish priest, begging him to give him the last sacraments, as he felt his end was near.

Surprised at the apparently healthy man, the priest heard his confession and gave him communion.

When Piarra had finished, he visited the undertaker, requesting him to take his measure for a coffin that would shortly be required, "as I am about to leave this world." Then he returned home, greeting all his friends and acquaintances whom he met on the way and telling them he was leaving them soon.

The old man went to bed early. He was found dead in bed the next morning.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

by WALTER TRUMBULL

Julian Street has been qualifying for the Explorers club. He recently discovered New York. True, Mr. Street has been a man of Manhattan for years past, but this was another city. It was the New York of the dawn age. Because of an early operation on a member of his family, Mr. Street was obliged to reach the hospital by 6 a. m. Knowing the night before that he was to make the trip, he conferred with Mrs. Street as to transportation.

"Take a taxi," she said. "Don't be silly," he responded. "What would a taxi be doing out at that hour?"

"I think there will be taxis," said Mrs. Street, "but, of course, one could always charter a milk wagon."

Emerging from his door a few moments before six, Mr. Street found a New York he did not know. The air smelled crisp and clean, free of gasoline fumes. The voices of the city were still. But there was a taxi.

Mr. Street now believes the taxi was driven by a man training for the motor races on the Indianapolis speedway. The streets apparently were empty and the driver took full advantage of the fact. Mr. Street maintained that through the window he saw what appeared to be one of those mo-vies, where they speed up the film, of a deserted village. He thinks they passed other taxis; it was just like two limited trains passing in opposite directions. If the engines had cut loose from the cars and were going right along without them. He saw some objects he opines might have been milk wagons, and claims he heard the voice of a newsboy, blown away by the rushing air. He thinks a railroad station or hotel flashed past, but isn't sure, as he was too busy hanging on and yelling at the driver. But it was very bracing. Mr. Street still insists we all should rise early in the morning and see the city free from traffic. It would be a great hour for a walk, he maintains.

It was Willard Fairchild who discovered the horse and sleigh. This was in the hills of Connecticut at a village which has no railroad station and plenty of snow. The horse and sleigh belonged to a farmer, who before trusting the outfit to Mr. Fairchild, asked him whether he was an experienced driver. Mr. Fairchild assured the farmer he had been around with horses a great deal, but neglected to mention that it had been with the artillery during the war, when he rode the caisson and others handled the horses. Still, all went well. Mr. Fairchild got his family into the sleigh and when the farmer handed him the reins clucked in the approved fashion, which

TO GO TO POT

"HE'S GONE all to pot" we hear about a man who has suffered a breakdown—perhaps nervous, perhaps physical, more likely both. For "gone to pot" is synonymous with "gone to pieces," "broken down"—and we might use other terms such as disintegrated, wreckage, flotsam!

While it may have appeared at first sight to be rather obscure, the metaphor is obvious when it is pointed out that the allusion is to the receptacle into which worthless and discarded odds and ends are thrown—the things that have gone to pieces.

The expression is a very old one. Its first recorded use being traced back as far as 1581 in Nat Woodes' "Conflict of Conscience."

COMFORT for COLICKY BABIES

... THROUGH CASTORIA'S GENTLE REGULATION

The best way to prevent colic, doctors say, is to avoid gas in stomach and bowels by keeping the entire intestinal tract open, free from waste. But remember this: a tiny baby's tender little organs cannot stand harsh treatment. They must be gently urged. This is just the time Castoria can help most. Castoria, you know, is made specially for babies and children. It is a pure vegetable preparation, perfectly harmless. It contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics. ## HOW SIN BEGINS

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 2:15-17; 3:1-6.
GOLDEN TEXT—Watch and pray, that ye enter not into temptation: the spirit indeed is willing, but the flesh is weak.

PRIMARY TOPIC—The Garden God Planted.
JUNIOR TOPIC—How Sin Started.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Overcome Temptation.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Our Responsibility for Our Sins.

A look out upon the world proves that man is not what he should be. It is not reasonable to suppose that man is now what he was when he came from the hands of the Creator, much less an improvement. The only way of accounting for this is by the historic fall of man as given in the Bible.

1. Man's Probation (Gen. 2:15-17). The place (v. 15). It was in the beautiful Garden of Eden. Man's environment was suited to his nature.

2. The necessity (v. 16). This grows out of man's constitution. Adam was created with the possibility of character, but not with character. Alternative choice makes character possible. Free will was what made Adam a real man.

3. The means (v. 17). It was most simple, just one prohibition. The tree of the knowledge of good and evil was forbidden. Alongside of this small restriction was placed a large privilege—the tree of life.

II. Man's Temptation (3:1-6).

1. The method (vv. 1-5). Satan, a personal, malicious being, appeared in the guise of a serpent. Notwithstanding the growing unpopularity of the doctrine, the fact remains that there is a personal devil. This is proven both by the Scriptures and experience. He did not appeal directly to the man. He chose to appeal to the woman through the serpent, and through the woman to the man.

a. He found the woman while alone.

b. He insinuated doubt into Eve's mind as to God's word and love. This is his method today. He tries to get people to doubt God's Word and then to doubt his goodness. He persuaded Eve that God was withholding from her something that was good. He today induces men to say that God is cruel, harsh, and unjust. He gets young people to think that father and mother are too exacting. As soon as one doubts God's word, he begins to criticize it and to disobey it.

c. To get Eve to doubt the penalty of sin. There is much flippant jesting about eternal punishment. He is remembered, however, that this does not change its reality.

d. He appealed to innocent appetite. He argued that there would be no harm in eating, but great advantage.

e. Eve gazed upon that which God had forbidden and lusted after it.

2. The fall (vv. 6-8). The steps in the fall seem to have been rapid. From doubting God's love, Eve went to doubting his word. From gazing upon and lusting after that which God had prohibited, there was but a short step to indulgence. Eve not only disobeyed, but involved Adam in her sin.

III. Man's Judgment (vv. 9-24).

God's holy nature is such that when men sin he at once manifests himself. God called Adam and Eve to account the same day.

1. A disturbed relationship with God (v. 8). The introduction of sin marred man's familiar intercourse with the Almighty. Adam and Eve not only hid from God's presence, but when summoned by him began to make excuse and Adam even laid the blame on God.

2. The degradation of the serpent (v. 14). He henceforth became the type of sin and Satan (Num. 21:9; John 3:14; Rev. 12:9).

3. The undying enmity between the seed of the woman and the seed of the serpent (v. 15). This bitter enmity has continued from that day to this.

4. The ultimate victory of the woman's seed (v. 15). Satan's seed has harassed the woman's seed through the centuries, but on the cross the final stroke was made which crushed his head (John 12:31; Heb. 2:14; I John 3:8). This is the first gleam of the glorious gospel of Christ.

5. The judgment upon the woman (v. 16). This relates primarily to her as a wife and mother.

6. Man's new relationship to the earth (vv. 17-19). The earth was cursed on his account.

7. Death (v. 19). This includes spiritual and physical death.

8. Expulsion from the garden (v. 24). When man's nature was changed by sin, out from the beautiful garden he must go.

RANDOM SAYINGS

Apparent need is not always real need. He is our best friend who helps our real need.

It is a higher exhibition of Christian manliness to be able to bear trouble than to get rid of it.

If you have something good to say to a man better look him up and say it now. He won't be able to read his tombstone when he's dead.

QUEER FOODS

Cooking Locusts in the Philippines.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.)

FROG legs, once almost an exclusive tidbit of Gallic peoples, are adorning many American dinner tables. Sixty million frog legs are consumed in New York city annually. Chicago also proves that frog-eating is becoming "Americanized," for more than thirty-six million were eaten in that city last year. San Francisco palates were "tickled" by more than sixteen million frog legs; New Orleans ate slightly more, and Los Angeles slightly less.

In fact, frog legs have become so popular that a new industry—frog ranching—has come into American industrial life. California has no native frogs but ranchers have seen to it that many pairs have been imported from Louisiana to habilitate synthetic frog lakes and marshes.

The frog's entry on American menus recalls many strange foods of the world. In the markets of the United States where frog legs may be purchased, the housewife may buy a fresh "marsh rabbit" which, before trapping and skinning, was none other than a muskrat.

For two centuries a town in Massachusetts has supported a seaweed (Irish moss) industry. Irish moss is torn from New England rocks and is used in making blancmange and many other puddings. There are some 200 edible seaweeds from which are extracted ingredients for American ice creams, jellies, pastries, "seaweed" soups and salads, while in Japan the weeds are boiled with rice and strips of meat and placed in a popular sandwich called sushi. The Japanese cultivate seaweed and in Tokyo buy the "farmers" employ more than 3,000 people.

Raw monkey brains on the half skull, pickled water beetles are eaten in China. Silkworms are eaten after the cocoon has been unwound. Horses, donkeys and camels, after they have lost their usefulness as beasts of burden, are consumed by some Asiatic tribes. Caterpillars, frogs and snails are relished when obtainable.

Water lily bulbs make delectable oriental desserts. The bulbs are often called water chestnuts. Their nutritive value is compared with that of tapioca.

Old Eggs Liked in China.

Chinese enjoy eggs whose owners have long forgotten their age. The orientals claim they lend a somewhat oysterlike taste to oriental soups. Jellyfish also are relished along the Asiatic seaboard.

At Japanese inns the traveler is told that "Bombay duck" can be had at a reasonable price. The hungry customer visions a fat fowl but the waiter brings in pieces of smoked fish about two inches long and as thin as a dime. The menu also includes pickled seaweed, seaweed jelly, and chutney, which resembles pickled citron, but is almost as hot as Mexican chili.

More raw than cooked fish is eaten by Japanese. Raw baby octopuses are particularly popular. "Japanese Limburger" is not a cheese but a Japanese pickled herring, or long white radish.

Koreans, like many orientals live mostly on rice. They cook their rice in oil and serve it with slices of red peppers. Kimchee, a kind of sauerkraut, is a favorite Korean dish.

To the north, the natives of Kamchatka relish the tongues and the narrow of the bones of reindeer, but the piece-of-resistance is the meat of unborn fawns. From the stomach of the reindeer the natives obtain their greens—half digested balls of moss. A popular native dish is reindeer sausage, which has been surrounded by dough and dropped into boiling water. On the lower end of the peninsula where salmon are plentiful, dishes of boiled fish eyes are considered a delicacy. Some inhabitants of Asia Minor prefer sheep eyes.

New Guinea natives find China a good market for sharks' fins from which the Celestians make a delectable soup, and also for beche de mer, a large sea slug found in south Pacific waters.

Eel is a Popular Dish.

The New Guinea natives are fond of the pith of sago palms, potatoes and bananas; and dog, snake and lizard flesh vie with that of the pig. The womenfolk gather berries, grubs and larvae from trees to grace the festive board.

Scientists Fight Pests With Natural Enemies

Entomologists, it is reported, are gradually changing their method of warfare against our insect foes. Instead of attempting to discover effective insecticides, they are now seeking methods of causing insects to war against each other. Fortunately the insect world is never really at peace at any time. The tremendous reproductive powers of this form of life are offset by the bugs, flies and birds which prey upon them.

The best way to keep the coddling moth under control, it has been found, is through a tiny wasp and likewise the mealy bug is best kept under control by its natural enemies. Instead of searching for insecticides, therefore, the search is for the natural enemies of the pest it is desired to combat and these are then imported or increased by protection from their natural enemies in turn.

Geography Simplified

"What do they mean when they say Washington, D. C.?" asked the teacher.
"Washington, de capital," piped up a little chap.

"FATIGUE?"

I just postpone it!

"No, I don't have 'nerves.' You can't have them, and hold this sort of position. My head used to throb around three o'clock, and certain days, of course, were worse than others."

"Then I learned to rely on Bayer Aspirin."

The sure cure for any headache in rest. But sometimes we must postpone it. That's when Bayer Aspirin saves the day. Two tablets, and the nagging pain is gone until you are home. And once you are comfortable, the pain seldom returns!

Keep Bayer Aspirin handy. Don't put it away, or put off taking it. Fighting a headache to finish the day may be heroic, but it is also a little foolish. So is sacrificing a night's sleep because you've an annoying cold, or irritated throat, or grumbling tooth, neuralgia, neuritis. These tablets always relieve. They don't depress the heart, and may be taken freely. That is medical opinion. It is a fact established by the last twenty years of medical practice.

The only caution to be observed is when you are buying aspirin. Bayer is genuine. Tablets with the Bayer cross are safe.

Food for thought

Men and women find that those recurrent spring colds reduce their alertness of mind and body. To avoid such nuisances, doctors advise them to increase their bodies' store of Vitamin A. It is recognized that Scott's Emulsion of Cod Liver Oil contains a wealth of this valuable protective vitamin... as well as Vitamin D, so indispensable for sound bones and teeth. Children and adults find the emulsion an easy, pleasant way of taking cod liver oil. Scott & Bowne, Bloomfield, N. J. Sales Representative, Harold F. Ritchie & Co., Inc., New York.

FIVE CONTRACTS AWARDED BY COUNTY COMMISSIONERS

Five contracts were awarded by the county commissioners Tuesday afternoon.

Clyde Ginder, of Fort Wayne, won out on the order for six 36x8 tires and eight 34x7 tires at a price of $724.42.

A black top kettle for use on highways will be furnished by the S. & L. Equipment Co. of Fort Wayne, for $265.

The Standard Oil Co. was given a contract for cut back asphalt and road oil to be furnished as needed.

The France Stone Co. of Toledo, O., will furnish the county's needs for stone at $1.44 a ton.

J. P. Heinlen of Garrett, was given a contract for county farm supplies for the ensuing quarter.

THE THIRTY-EIGHTH ANNUAL WINONA LAKE BIBLE CONFERENCE

The Winona Lake Bible Conference will open its thirty-eighth annual program at Winona Lake, Indiana on Friday, August 12th and continue through Sunday, August 21st.

This Conference has been known, and perhaps justly so, as the "World's Greatest Bible Conference." For ten hours a day running through the ten days in August just mentioned the greatest preachers and Bible Teachers the world affords proclaim and expound the Word of God to the throngs that crowd into the spacious Billy Sunday Tabernacle with its seating capacity of nearly 7,000 people.

The Director of this great Conference is the Rev. William Edward Biederwolf, formerly a pastor, then for many years an Evangelist, and now Minister of Royal Poinciana Chapel of Palm Beach. Dr. Biederwolf has been a prominent figure in the religious activities of Winona Lake Institutions for thirty-eight years, and has been largely responsible during the last fourteen years for the tremendous programs that have so greatly stirred the throngs in attendance.

The attendance last season was the largest in the history of the Conference, and the opinion was generally expressed that the program went far beyond any other ever offered, that it would be hard to equal and certainly impossible to excel, but Dr. Biederwolf gives it as his candid opinion that the program for this coming Conference will be even stronger than that of last season.

It has been the policy of the Conference to announce only such speakers as have definitely been engaged, and thus far these are as follows: Dr. Robert E. Speer of New York, August 16 thro 18; Dr. Robert G. Lee of Memphis, August 19 thro 21; Dr. C. J. Rolls of New Zealand, August 12 thro 16; Dr. J. C. Massee of Atlanta, August 12 thro 21; Dr. Charles S. Medbury of Des Moines August 12 thro 14; Bishop Leonard of Buffalo, August 16 thro 18; Dr. George McNeely of Newark, August 15 thro 17; Dr. Clinton N. Howard of Rochester, August 13 thro 14; Dr. Alva McClain, of Columbus, August 17 thro 21; Melvin Trotter of Grand Rapids, August 18 thro 21; Miss Grace Saxe of Chicago, August 15 thro 21; Philip Sidersky of Los Angeles, August 13; Mr. William Danner of New York, August 17; Dr. Jacob Peltz of Chicago, August 12. A number of interesting Missionary speakers will be announced later.

Six Ministers Retired

Six veteran Indiana Methodist Episcopal preachers whose combined years in church service totaled 226 years were retired on pension by the conference. These pastors will get $20 per year for each year in service, as pension.

They were:
The Rev. U. S. A. Bridge, of Noblesville, former superintendent of the Wabash district, 44 years in service; the Rev. H. Runkle, of Bristol, 33 years in service; the Rev. F. A. Armstrong, of Modoc, 42 years in service; the Rev. H. L. Liddle, of Saratoga, 33 years in service; the Rev. E. J. Magor, of Hillsburg, 38 years in service; and the Rev. I. R. Goodwin, of Economy, 36 years in service.

The conference also adopted a resolution recommending that the minimum salary of preachers in the conference be fixed at $1,500 a year. The average salary now is $1,800.

HOGG SECURES PASSAGE OF 21 SPECIAL BILLS

(Special to the St. Joe News)
Washington.—During the past week Congressman David Hogg of Indiana was successful in securing the enactment of twenty-one special bills, each of which provides for an increase in pension to a Civil War widow.

A report was made by the chairman of the Invalid Pension Committee, that each of these cases presented by Congressman Hogg, were shown by the Committee's investigation to be especially needy and deserving.

Congressman Hogg also has a bill now pending before Congress which provides for a monthly allowance to be paid to the dependent widows, orphans, and parents of deceased World War Veterans.

HOWARD S. GRIMM ISSUES STATEMENT

A famous humorist one time remarked that, there was much complaint made about the weather but, no one seemed to do anything about it, and so it is with our present confiscatory tax rates, much is said about high taxes but no one seems to do anything about the matter. The levy and collection of taxes for the support and operation of our government has never been a popular feature of our system of government.

Our taxes have been on the increase over a period of years. They will have to be reduced over some period of years. I believe that the next General Assembly can do much definite good by not undertaking too large a program of tax reform. Too much was undertaken last session and the mountain brought forth a mouse.

It is my opinion that if we can enact an income tax law that will definitely displace the present twenty-nine cent State levy against real estate we will accomplish much.

The Counties should have an even split with the State Highway Department of the present four cent gasoline tax. At present the state gets three cents and counties, cities, towns and townships get one cent divided among them. If two cents of this tax were given the counties you could displace practically the entire levy now made upon real estate for construction and maintenance of county and township highways. There is probably no valid reason why the county highway Superintendent should not have charge of all the highways in the county.

We have a vast sum of money invested in our highways from the standpoint of good business we cannot afford to neglect them but we can call a halt on further construction for a few years until we pay for what we now have. We need a breathing spell.

Mere magic will not reduce taxes, neither will mere talk, nor finding means of raising additional revenue. The only one sure way to reduce taxes is to curtail governmental expenditures. The only sure way to satisfy the taxpayers of Indiana is to properly distribute the burden of taxes. A substantial reduction should be made in the pay of every public official.

The time has now arrived when the tax paying public are demanding a hearing and a show down; there is a demand for sane thinking and constructive action on the tax problem.

(Adv.) Howard S. Grimm.

IN REPUBLICAN RACE FOR COUNTY TREASURER

Chester J. Hodge was circulating in this section of DeKalb county Monday, in the interest of his candidacy for the Republican nomination for county treasurer, calling on old acquaintances and looking for others of his party.

In his conversation he stated that his grandfather, E. B. Mott, came to DeKalb county in 1842, and was the first lawyer in the county, was later elected as the second judge.

The Hodge, being republicans from the beginning of time, have never held public office in DeKalb county in these many years, and of course Chester is anxious for republican voters to consider his name on the Primary ballot on May 3rd.

NINETEEN DEATHS AGAINST SEVENTEEN BIRTHS.

Deaths in DeKalb county during the month of March exceeded births by two, according to a report to the Indiana state board of health by Dr. W. W. Swarts of Auburn, DeKalb county health commissioner. There were nineteen deaths during the month, only three of which were persons under 50 years of age. March is considered the mortality month for elderly people and the average age during the month was 63½ years. Two were over 92 years of age. There were seventeen births, twelve males and five females in March. Thirty-five marriages occurred during the month.

DID THE DEPRESSION COME IN THIS MANNER TO YOUR HOME

The Tunnelton, Ind., Booster contained an article contributed by W. B. Timmons, Oklahoma City, Okla., on the depression, and we pass it on to our readers. Here it is:

"I see my mistakes and many others have acted likewise. I bo't a Ford instead of a farm, and it is worn out, but the farm is still producing. I invested in a radio instead of a cow, and the radio gives static instead of milk. I am feeding five hounds, which respond to the names of Red, Ted, Fed, Hed and Theed, instead of five calves. I spent all my cash in 1928, used my credit in 1929, traded on my future wages in 1930, so hard times caught me in 1931. If I had spent my last ten bucks for flour and meat, instead of oil and gas, I would have been sitting fine.

"I went fishing two weeks instead of fixing fences so's my cow won't get out, but she's dry now and mortgaged to boot for two blankets my wife bo't of an agent instead of payin' the preacher. I am now on a cash and carry plan, but I have no cash.

"The man I am working for is busted on account of nobody will buy cotton clothes. All the girls wear silk stockings and silk underclothes right here in our cotton patches. I had saved up $4 for a rainy day, but it turned dry and I spent the $4 for two inner tubes. I tried hard to make both ends meet with a turnip patch, but when I got ready to sell everybody was givin' them away and the market was glutted. I am worried plumb into the bone, beside my wife's kinfolks are coming over next Tuesday to visit us three weeks.

"Now, Editor Booster, please write me if you hear of any relief from the government coming down my way. I am willing to be an Al Smith or a Hoover man for a few weeks if that will help any. I believe that if Congress would pass a law prohibiting prosperity we would soon have it."

WHO'S RIGHT—WET vs DRY ATTITUDE?

Our attention has been arrested by two articles which appeared in one of our daily exchanges coming to our editorial desk, both relative to the much discussed question of prohibition.

The first article appears under the caption, "Wets" to seek defeat of all "dry candidates," and bears the date Fort Wayne, Ind., April 8, and the sentiment is sponsored by the Association against the 18th Amendment, whose purpose is to ultimately repeal the amendment, but whose immediate purpose is the nomination of wet candidates. They have expressed themselves as "opposed to any candidate who does not express clear-cut opinions in favor of repeal of the 18th Amendment." The movement, it is stated will be non-partisan. The threat was made by several men present, that they will "refuse to make campaign subscriptions to their parties nationally unless the parties go on record as favoring repeal."

Well—this is some change of front to be sure. Many of our readers will remember how righteously (?) indignant the wets became when a dry voter demanded of a candidate who solicited his aid at the polls, how said anxious candidate stood on the question of prohibition. It was a terrible indignity, then, to ask a candidate such a question, just as if the question of prohibition outweighed all other matters of state. That's what the wets said we've heard it thousands of times.

But now, yes, now, the shoe is on the other foot, and it is eminently proper to demand that your candidate is for repeal and the question of booze does now become pre-eminent over and above all other questions of state.

Newspaper propaganda paid for by wet interests have made it appear that the public is ripe for repeal, this no doubt accounts for the rabid statements and cocksureness of its protagonists.

In quite a different spirit we read in the same paper the utterances of Dr. True Wilson, who says, before the Northern Indiana Methodist Episcopal Conference, that the issue of Prohibition has come to lie at the base of American Government.

"Our problem is not whether prohibition shall fail, but whether our form of government shall crash."

"I believe that the time has come when the dries in every political division of the country should insist that sheriffs and county attorneys and mayors and police and local judges enforce the law or get out. The people are ready for such a movement."

"The flow of rum across the borders should be stopped—stopped without regard to the extent of the effort necessary to stop it; the diversion of liquors released under permit should be stopped—stopped without regard to the interest of the wet politicians." And best of all of Dr. Wilson's utterances, in our opinion, is this: "The objective, crime promoting, rebellion inciting effort of certain subsidized newspapers which seek to create a reign of nullification and lawlessness is a definite attack upon the liberty and privileges of the dry majority of the people of this country."

"The present rebellion against majority rule reveals the lawless and destructive character of the liquor traffic and its minions."

"They have accepted all of the privileges of majority rule for a hundred and fifty years, but refuse to abide by that rule when it goes against them."

And Dr. Wilson could have truthfully added. They violated every regulatory provision when they operated under the license system, and, hypocritically say liquor should be supplied to those who want it under a system of government regulation, a regulation they ignored when permitted to operate under a license system, and one they will continue to ignore if Uncle Sam once more done the bar tenders apron to deal death and destruction to those whose interests and welfare are guaranteed by the Constitution of the United States, and which act would be nullification of that noble instrument.

B. & O. WANTS TO ABANDON ITS STATION HERE

Indianapolis, April 12.—A petition to abandon the Baltimore and Ohio agency station at St. Joe, DeKalb county, was filed by the rail road company with the public service commission. The station, the petition said, is not profitable, and is unnecessary to the needs of the community.

MAKING of HOLLAND

Dutch Damsels Talking Shop.

(Furnished by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)—WNU Service.

VEGETABLES, not fish, will be the products of the broad expanse of the Zuidersee, which now is having a complete change of face. Drainage and filling the Zuidersee will add more than 1,000 square miles of farm land to the Netherlands area. The work when completed, will cost the Dutch government some $350,000,000.

Long ago the ocean said to the Hollander, "You shall have no land here." The Hollander said to the ocean, "We will have a country here," and they have one, in spite of water, winds, and waves.

In Holland all is new—the gulfs, lakes, and islands have come into existence under man's observation. He has seen within historic times sand close a river's mouth, land converted into water, and lakes dry up and disappear.

The ordinary agencies of change—wind and wave, rain and flood, and the rise and fall of land—have here found a favoring field for their activities.

Long after the greater part of the continent of Europe had become fixed and stable, Holland began its geographic formation and is still pursuing processes intended to hold or enlarge its boundaries.

By the aid of old maps and documents we can learn what Holland was at the time it first found a place and designation on the world's charts, and following them in sequence one can note the changes that have been wrought by the action of the waters of the rivers, the waves of the sea, and the hands of man—in short, how Holland was made.

The power of the rivers one can see in the inundations; the action of the sea in the sand dunes along the coast; and the transformation by man everywhere.

Before the birth of the Rhine a great part of the Netherlands, as we now see it, was a sea, limited on the German side by a rocky coast which now shows itself in the Tusteburger Wald hills. The uplifting of the Ardennes enclosed a sea in the interior of Germany which, shielded by the Alps on its southern coast and protected from the cold winds of the north, became full to overflowing from the melting ice. Finally the pent-up waters broke through, and in the bed thus formed the Rhine has since been flowing.

How the Land Was Formed.
With the rush of the waters masses of rocks were hurled along until the moving force exhausted itself; smaller particles were carried farther, and when the sea was reached its resistance robbed the river of its final burden, and sand dunes formed the northern boundaries of Holland. The pebbles and grains of sand on which rests the soil of Gelderland and Overijssel and the island of Texel show that their primeval home was the basalt regions of the Rhine.

The result of the conflict between the waters of the rivers and the sea into which they seek to find an outlet is seen in the deltas of our largest streams.

Before reaching the Dutch frontier the Rhine has lost all the beauty of its banks, and flows in great, lazy curves suggestive of approaching old age. The inclination of gentility is now seen in the separation of the Rhine into two parts. The main branch shamefully disavows its name and throws itself into the Meuse, a river of French origin; the other branch, insulted by the name of Dommel, separates into two parts, one emptying into the Zuidersee; the other, retaining its early name, though qualified as the Lower Rhine, goes as far as Dordrecht, where it divides for the third time.

During the reign of Louis Bonaparte a canal was opened through the dunes and the Rhine again conducted to the sea. The mouth of this canal is protected by enormous dikes and breakwaters and the sea itself is held in check by locks, or sluice-gates.

When the tide is high these locks are closed, to prevent the waters of the sea from invading the land; when the tide falls they are opened, to give passage to the waters of the Rhine which have accumulated behind them, and then 3,000 cubic feet of water a minute pass out.

Continual Battle With the Sea.
The rivers of Holland, like all rivers whose lower reaches have but little fall, drop sediment along their lower levels, especially at their mouths. The sea has resisted this encroachment, and in retreating has continually sought to regain lost territory. It has thrown barriers across the river channel to make the rivers themselves destroy the land of their creation; it has buried the rich alluvial soil fathoms deep under unproductive sands, and where it does not throw up sand dunes as a fortress against itself, the state must accept the challenge and wage a royal battle.

The other rivers that have contributed to the weal and woe of Holland have been less vacillating in approaching their outlets, but equal vigilance has been needed to keep their waters from inundating the land. Dikes must be built on both banks as high and as far upstream as experience demands.

Along the North sea there are places where, owing to changing winds, the sand cannot accumulate in quantities sufficient to form protecting dunes. Here sea-dikes must be built—veritable fortifications.

They are built of earth, firmly packed on the sea-face, and partly paved with dressed Norway granite or Rhine basalt blocks.

Beginning at the top, the dimensions are as follows:

Thirty feet across the top, on which there is a double-track railroad for the transportation of materials with which to make repairs.

On the sea-face it inclines at an angle of 30 degrees for a distance of about 40 feet; then the slope is one in three. Here the stone paving begins and extends about 50 feet.

From this point for 100 feet a sod surface is maintained, but beyond that for 110 feet, where the forces of the storm-lashed waves beat hardest, the surface is faced with stone.

On the land side the face of the dike is faced with stone, and extends about 50 feet.

As a precaution, three rows of piles are driven in to hold the facing in place, and two other rows of larger piles, with their tops protruding, extend along the line where the waves are most aggressive.

Costly But Necessary.
The amount of labor required to construct such fortifications can hardly be imagined and the cost is well-nigh beyond conjecture. The piles, all of which came from other lands, cost, in place, $4 each.

This defense is not an idle precaution. When the west winds drive the waters from the English channel to meet those deflected by Norway's unyielding shores, they fill up the North sea and seek their old course across the Netherlands.

The sluggish current of the Zuidersee is a weak contestant with the remorseless tide of the North sea. Consequently its shifting sands threatened to close up the harbor of Amsterdam and also rendered precarious the navigation out to and around the Helder. It was therefore decided some years ago to construct a ship canal directly to the North sea.

This great work was completed in 1870, with the sea terminus at IJmuiden. The sea being higher at high tide than the water in the harbor at Amsterdam, it was necessary to have big locks at that end.

The traffic through this canal is so great that the water let through in the locking would soon become a source of danger. The harbor of Amsterdam is, therefore, shut off from the Zuidersee by means of dikes, with a series of locks to permit ingress and egress.

Protecting Dikes Everywhere.
It is not the sea alone that calls for the defending dikes. Every outlet into the sea must have embankments high enough to overtop the highest incoming tide, for twice every day these outlets become estuaries of the sea, and the land would be covered by the invading brackish water if it were not for the dike-like banks.

The farmers frequently build their dwelling houses under the lee of these banks, and from the deck of a passing steamboat one can literally look down the chimney, though he may hardly, as same have claimed, see what the farmer's wife is cooking for his dinner.

The Dutch word polder is a term applied to any area of land protected by an encircling dike and drained by its own system of pumps. Some of these are barely below the general level and need only a slight embankment; such are usually of firm soil, and after the removal of the water become arable fields. Others were originally ponds or lakes, or deposits of muck which have to be inclosed by more substantial embankments, and the removal of the water in the first instance as well as subsequently is a serious matter.

THE CALL OF ABRAHAM

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 12:1-9.
GOLDEN TEXT—And I will make of thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing.

PRIMARY TOPIC—Abram Leaving Home.

JUNIOR TOPIC—God Calls Abram to a Great Adventure.
INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—Making Life an Adventure.
YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—The Conquering Power of Faith.

1. His Separation (v. 1).

The new era inaugurated with Noah as head ended in a colossal failure in the impious attempt of man on the plains of Shinar to set himself free from God's government. In view of this failure, God turned aside from the race as such and called Abram and placed him at the head of a new nation which he would train for himself. This call involved

1. A great sacrifice. It meant the severance of three ties:

a. His country in the widest range of his affections.

b. His place of birth and kindred which comes still closer to his heart.

c. His father's house as the innermost circle of all tender emotions. All these must be cast off before the Lord could get him into the place of blessing. This is a call that is much needed today. The Lord is continually saying, "Come ye out from among them" (II Cor. 6:16-18).

2. The performance of heroic tasks. For Abram to go into a strange land and take possession of it, for God called for heroism. The life of separation from the world costs much, but it is the only way to have God's favor.

3. God's Promise to Abram (vv. 2-3).

The demand for separation was followed by a seven-fold promise—a gracious engagement on God's part to communicate unmerited favor and confer blessings upon him.

1. "I will make of thee a great nation" (v. 2). This was fulfilled in a natural way in the Jewish nation and in Ishmael (Gen. 17:20); also in a spiritual seed embracing both Jews and Gentiles (Gal. 3:7, 8).

2. "I will bless thee" (v. 2). This was fulfilled.

a. Temporally (Gen. 13:14-17; 24:35). Abram was enriched with lands, cattle, silver and gold.

b. Spiritually (Gen. 15:6; John 8:56). He was freely justified on the grounds of his faith. The righteousness of Christ was imputed unto him, also he had the exalted privilege of talking face to face with the Lord.

3. "And make thy name great" (v. 2). Going out from his father's house, he himself was to have a great name. He was to be the head of a new house which would be venerated far and wide. He is known as the "friend of God" (James 2:23).

4. "Thou shalt be a blessing" (v. 2). We now pass from the lower to the higher phase of the promise. It was a great thing to be thus honored and blessed by God, but to be the medium of blessing to others was greater still.

5. "I will bless them that bless thee" (v. 3). Abram and the nation which came forth from his loins became the very touchstone of God. Since he is God's friend, he regards acts performed toward him as toward himself. This has been strikingly exemplified in all ages since. The nations that have used the Jews well have been blessed.

6. And curse him that curseth thee" (v. 3). The nations which have turned against Abram and the nation of which he was head have never prospered. While God at times used the surrounding nations as scourges for his people, he in turn punished them for it.

7. "And in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed" (v. 3). This has been fulfilled in a. The Jewish nation being made the repository of the oracles of God. Through them the Bible has been given to the world.

b. The bringing of the Redeemer into the world. Thus they were the channel through which God's richest Gift came into the world.

c. A future time when Jews shall be God's missionaries in carrying the good tidings to the ends of the earth.

III. Abram's Obedience to God (vv. 4-9).

Abram at once departed out of his own land. He proved his faith by his obedience. He went out not knowing whither he went. He was a typical believer. He renounced indulgence and idolatry. He separated himself for a testimony by his acts of witness. He entered into Canaan and accepted a pilgrim life.

The Coat That Resembles a Dress

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

HERE you have it, dear followers of fashion, who are ever seeking the latest. It's just out—the coat which takes on a dual personality. It looks like a dress but in reality is a bona fide coat.

Who cares if appearances are delectable, if a coat which looks like a dress can "make good" as a spring wrap which is just the very thing to wear over one's gay print silk frock or which does duty on week-end trips as an admirable traveling costume.

It's because they are unlined and have the dressmaker touch that they are of the coveted wearable type which looks well and appropriate where a coatlike coat would seem too heavy for a balmy spring day.

It's no secret on the part of the designer that the deliberate aim is to simulate a dress in every detail, so far as is possible, of these new and mysterious coats. Which is to say that the material in the first place must have a dressy look and be light-weight. This coat must be soft-sleeved, unlined, button trimmed most likely, and it is almost sure to take on the new wrap-around "lines." For that matter the smart looking wrap-around dresses which are the rage at the present moment and the coat which is a coat but looks like a dress, are that much alike in appearance they might easily be taken for twins.

It is also part of the plan that these coats continue their camouflage in that they maintain flat dresslike necklines. Many of them are collarless while others adopt a scarf drape such as might grace any of the new springtime frocks.

The coats pictured (yes, they are really and truly coats and not cost-resses as one might surmise) choose the soft-draped necklines rather than to go collarless. If, however, you have your heart set on a collarless wrap, the beauty about the model shown to the right in the picture is that its flat fur capelet-scarf is detachable and it can be adjusted to suit the caprice of its wearer. The skirt of this dresslike coat buttons all the way up the side-front. The diagonal slant of its blouse top is also a style feature of note. The coat is made of thin woolen crepe and the cape-scarf is black galyak.

As to the other coat pictured, its bracelet sleeve may be adjusted in length to tune to the occasion. Wide bands of black galyak enhance the sleeves, while the capelet which serves as a collar is of self-fabric. The metal slide and buttons on the belt answer to fashion's call.

The adjustable or bracelet sleeve as above mentioned is a very interesting innovation which has come into play this season. Many a frock is made to do double duty because of its sleeves which, having a rubber drawstring in its hemline, can be pushed up or down to a short puff top or elbow length or to the wrist, thus tuning it to more or less formal or informal wear.

Speaking of the coat which aspires to look like a dress. In some instances it neither is belted or buttoned but fastens with a soft-tied bow of self-fabric. Just now it is the coat made of lightweight woolen, preferably a crepe which is holding the center of the stage, but with milder days coming the prospect is that modes of this genre will be fashioned of handsome coating silks, preferably black navy or beige.

SPORTS COSTUMES
REMAIN PRACTICAL

Once again the scarf ties up with the mode and becomes much more than a mere decorative accessory. Almost every sports costume has a scarf neckline, a very good note, since it gives the softness that tempers a rather more severe or tailored silhouette.

The practical note continues to be held for sports clothes, that is, for sports things that are to see active duty. Country clothes are a trifle more dressy, with more decorative details, yet managing, too, to look the part properly.

We think that the new things for sports and country year will meet with your approval since they show that careless, casual look that really is the result of much calculated effort. Jersey is the favored material, used of course, in various fancy weaves.

But whatever the type of sports frock or suit, the scarf is omnipresent, lending its color and softness to the scheme.

Chic Afternoon Frock Leader in Popularity

The little afternoon frock is growing up. It is becoming sophisticated, retaining its simplicity in a most subtle manner. There's no doubt that the "little" frock has become an essential part of our wardrobe.

Many women all but live in the little frock of black satin or crepe de chine, as they find it fits into almost every scheme and confers a charming, youthful look on the wearer.

Overdone clothes are definitely on the way out, for we have realized that nothing adds years and heaviness to the figure as does the overtrimmed, elaborately made frock of rich material. And so the frock that used to be the Cinderella of the wardrobe has now become the most popular frock of all.

BUTTONS TO NECK

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

There is a very pleasing version of an early spring suit dress made in an intriguing material combining sepiol and durance yarns in a waffle-like construction that has depth and sheerness at the same time. The empire waistline, which incidentally is creeping higher and higher even in daytime clothes, is subtly treated here. The flannel cuffs which match the vestee are removable. The seaming of the gored skirt is a feature. The vestee buttons right up to the neck—because higher necklines are very fashionable. Of course, one or two buttons may be left unfastened if the high neckline is not flattering.

When TEETHING
makes HIM FUSSY

One of the most important things you can do to make a teething baby comfortable is to see that little bowels do their work of carrying off waste matter promptly and regularly. For this nothing is better than Castoria, a pure vegetable preparation specially made for babies and children. Castoria acts so gently you can give it to young infants to relieve colic. Yet it is always effective, for older children, too. Remember, Castoria contains no harsh drugs, no narcotics—is absolutely harmless. When your baby is fretful with teething or a food upset, give a cleansing dose of Castoria. Be sure you get genuine Castoria with the name:

Plant Potatoes Adapted Here

By T. E. MYERS, County Agricultural Agent
of DeKalb County

Of twenty-five varieties tested out by growers throughout Indiana, Certified Early Ohio and Irish Cobblers have proven to be the best varieties of potatoes for early planting, while Rural New Yorkers for late planting is the king of them all. As one farmer said, "Rurals make a slow growth at first. They also have a small, thin, tough leaf, which is able to withstand the extremes of temperature and drought." The plant stays green during the dry weather and makes potatoes when the rain comes in the fall. Where Rurals were making over 100 bushels per acre last fall, Green Mountains produced less than half this yield. This variety sets its tubers early in the season and can not withstand hot, dry weather.

Rurals are commonly known to farmers as Rural New Yorkers, Sir Walter Raleigh, White Giant, Carmen No. 3, late Petoskey and Russet Rurals. Green Mountains have several other names, such as Golden Coin, Uncle Sam, State of Maine and Empire State.

Farmers who are getting the largest yields from their fields are planting Certified Early Ohio, Irish Cobblers and Rurals.

Grow Some Strawberries

Fresh red, ripe strawberries are even more tempting when they have the added attraction of coming straight from your own garden. Every gardener, no matter how small his space, can well afford to grow a few quarts of strawberries.

Select a sunny place which is loose and rich for the strawberry patch. If the ground is not rich and loose make it so by applying a few wheelbarrow loads of manure. Plow or spade under this early in the spring and thoroughly prepare the soil.

Long before this, get your order in for strawberry plants from a reliable nurseryman. You can figure how many you need by counting 50 plants for each 50 feet of row. Rows may be placed two feet apart. Not less than 50 plants should be put out and a 100 or 200 will provide an ample supply of fresh fruit besides some to can.

As to varieties, tests at Purdue University have shown that Premier is one of the best varieties for the home garden, which, if given good care, will provide an abundance of fancy berries of high quality. In addition to this, many gardeners if they can water occasionally, may well try 25 to 50 ever-bearers such as Mastodon. These will provide fruit throughout the late summer if given extra good care.

TODAY

With the setting of the sun, your hopes of yesterday died out. All right. That was yesterday.

Things didn't materialize the way you dreamed they would. All right again. Now—the present hour—is Today. Yesterday bears no relation to it, except perhaps, the relation that a nightmare bears to the morning after.

Forget all about yesterday... it is dead and buried in the cemetery of Time.

Today is alive. Are you? Well then, get busy! Fling from your shoulders the depressing weight of those hopes that haven't come true. Stand erect. Man, the world is yours! You have just as much claim on its good things—on the things you've longed for and prayed for and worked for—as the other fellow has.

This hour has been handed to you as a gift from the overflowing storehouse of Eternity.

What are you doing with it? Answer that.

Moping? Growling? Despairing? For shame!

God has favored you with an

CENSUS REPORTS LAND AND CAPITAL INVESTED IN DRAINAGE ENTERPRISES; DRAINAGE WORKS; AND AREA OF ENTERPRISES IN INDIANA

A drainage bulletin for Indiana, recently issued by the Bureau of the Census, containing State and county statistics, shows the organized drainage enterprises in the State as covering 10,214,014 acres. Of this amount 9,361,457 acres comprised the improved land; 681,869 acres, woodland; and 170,888 acres, other unimproved land. There were 9,308,627 acres sufficiently well drained to raise a normal crop; 688,218 acres fit for a partial crop; and 222,269 acres unfit to raise a crop because of lack of drainage.

There were 10,150,221 acres in occupied farms, 8,454,498 acres in planted crops, and 486,660 idle acres in these enterprises.

The drainage works included approximately 20,787 miles of ditches, 10,439 miles of tile drains, 132 miles of levees and 4 pumping plants which served 2,763 acres. The capital invested in enterprises was $54,110,854, an average of $5.30 per acre.

There were 18,339 drainage enterprises in Indiana with an average area of 1,267 acres. Of this number 705 contained 5,000 acres or more, 7,762 contained from 500 and 5,000 acres and 9,872 had less than 500 acres.

Approximately 3 per cent of the land was in enterprises reported as in arrears in payment of principal or interest on bonds or other obligations. The land reported delinquent in drainage taxes amounted to 99,698 acres.

Enterprises organized between 1870 and 1920 contained 93 per cent of the land in organized projects, while approximately 6 per cent of the land was in enterprises organized between 1920 and 1930.

About 55 per cent of the drained land was in enterprises which apportioned maintenance work to landowners. The average cost of operation and maintenance work in 1929 was 3 cents per acre.

A careful daily washing of shoulders and withers with cold water, or better, cold salt water, will cleanse and toughen the skin in preparation for the severe work of warm weather. This washing should be continued from two to four weeks, depending upon the age of the horse and the condition of the shoulders.

Many horses, especially young horses, are troubled with sore shoulders in the spring. The preparation of harness and the fitting of shoulders will prevent this trouble. Clean the harness, fit the collar properly, and pay careful attention to cleaning collar pads and pounding them smooth. Mr. and Mrs. J. C. F. Abel are at Montpelier, Ohio, staying with their son, Glen Abel, and wife for a few weeks. Mr. and Mrs. Laney Gee called on them last week and found Mr. Abel some better and anxious to return to St. Joe. A letter received Monday states that Mr. Abel is not so well.

Names as delegates to the state conventions are filed after securing signers in the districts asking that such a person's name be placed on the primary ballot. There are four men that perhaps will be disappointed, namely: E. D. Mullett and M. L. Ault as democratic delegates from Wilmington. Troy, Stafford and Franklin townships, and also Jacob Varner and Darrell W. Carpenter as republican candidates from Wilmington township. The reason they were disqualified was that their petitions contained names of opposite political parties. They say everything is fair in politics but this does not seem to fulfill the law.

THE SCOUT LAW

1. A SCOUT IS TRUSTWORTHY.

A Scout's honor is to be trusted. If he were to violate his honor by telling a lie, or by cheating, or by not doing exactly a given task, when trusted on his honor, he may be directed to hand over his scout badge.

2. A SCOUT IS LOYAL.
He is loyal to all whom loyalty is due; his scout leader, his home, and parents and country.

3. A SCOUT IS HELPFUL.
He must be prepared at any time to save life, help injured persons, and share the home duties. He must do at least one good turn to somebody every day.

4. A SCOUT IS FRIENDLY.
He is a friend to all and a brother to every other scout.

5. A SCOUT IS COURTEOUS.
He is polite to all, especially to women, children, old people, and the weak and helpless. He must not take any pay for being helpful or courteous.

6. A SCOUT IS KIND.
He is a friend to animals. He will not kill nor hurt any living creature needlessly but will strive to save and protect all harmless life.

7. A SCOUT IS OBEDIENT.

He obeys his parents, scoutmaster, patrol leader, and all other duly constituted authorities.

8. A SCOUT IS CHEERFUL.
He smiles whenever he can. His obedience to orders is prompt and cheerful. He never shirks or grumbles at hardships.

9. A SCOUT IS THRIFTY.
He does not wantonly destroy property. He works faithfully, wastes nothing, and makes the best use of his opportunities. He saves his money so that he may pay his own way, be generous to those in need, and helpful to worthy objects. He may work for pay but must not receive tips for courtesies or good turns.

10. A SCOUT IS BRAVE.
He has the courage to face danger in spite of fear and has to stand up for the right against the coaxings of friends or the jeers or threats of enemies, and defeat does not down him.

11. A SCOUT IS CLEAN.
He keeps clean in body and thought, stands for clean speech, clean sport, clean habits, and travels with a clean crowd.

12. A SCOUT IS REVERENT.
He is reverent toward God. He is faithful in his religious duties and respects the conviction of others in matters of custom and religion.

Luncheon, Tea Suggestions

Where a luncheon precedes the card game, certain dishes are appropriate, with light tea between games, sandwiches, salads, and a beverage, cold or hot, as one desires; a late supper includes hot dishes of various kinds with salads and sandwiches. In fact, sandwiches, salads and beverages are the important part of most menus.

The following are a few suggestions:

Chicken Mousse.—Take one cupful of the white meat of cooked chicken, two cupfuls of chicken stock or broth, three egg yolks, one teaspoonful of salt, one-fourth teaspoonful of pepper, one-half cupful of finely chopped almonds, one and one-half tablespoonfuls of gelatin, a dash of cayenne and one cupful of whipped cream. Soak the gelatin in one-half cupful of cold stock and add the beaten egg yolks and seasonings. Cook in a double boiler until as thick as custard, add the gelatin. Mix with the almonds and chicken cut fine. When it begins to set fold in one cupful of whipped cream. Mold and chill and serve with:

Sauce Tartare.—Mix in the order given: One teaspoonful of mustard, one-half teaspoonful of pepper, one teaspoonful of powdered sugar, one saltspoonful of salt, a few drops of onion juice, yolks of two eggs, one-half cupful of olive oil, three tablespoonfuls of vinegar, one tablespoonful each of chopped olives, capers and cucumber pickles and minced parsley. Add the oil slowly, then the vinegar and chopped ingredients. This will keep in a cool place for weeks.

Lobster Club Sandwich.—Remove a cold, cooked lobster from the shell and arrange on toast points toasted on one side and buttered. On the lobster place mayonnaise dressing, on top of this a crisp slice of bacon, another slice of lobster and mayonnaise. Garnish with sliced tomato, bacon curls and olives.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK by WALTER TRUMBULL

Real estate men, among themselves, divide New York into districts. There is, for example, the Grand Central district, the Plaza district, the Pennsylvania district, and so on. One of these experts said recently that the absorption power of the Grand Central district, up to 1929, had been about a million feet of rentable space a year. Now there is a surplus there of three and one-half million feet. From this he deduced that the district was now about three years behind former normal growth. He thinks the whole of Manhattan is about three years overbuilt.

It appears to be a fact that in New York, and I suppose in all other places, one side of the street, in a certain area, is very much better for business purposes than the other side. They tell me, for instance, that the greatest pedestrian travel is between the Pennsylvania and Grand Central stations. The mass of people on foot cross on the north side of Forty-fourth street, then turn up the west side of Fifth avenue to Thirty-eighth street, where they cross to the east side of Fifth avenue to walk the four blocks to Forty-second street. This crossing of the avenue is explained by the old Wendell estate, a church, and the Public Library being on the east side. The crowds cross so as to be on the side with the shops.

One of the reasons the Empire State building was constructed on its present location was that it is about halfway between the two stations. But in these days that doesn't do it much good. Its saving asset has been the tower. People have been patronizing that lofty view of the city and country at the rate of about $1,000,000 a year. How long this patronage will continue, nobody knows.

Frank Case, owner of the Algonquin.

How It Started by Jean Newton

"By the Skin of Your Teeth"

IT IS unnecessary to affirm the popularity of this expression to indicate a narrow escape or achieving something by a very narrow margin. We hear it used every day in common speech.

As a man escapes "by the skin of his teeth" being injured by an automobile, sometimes it is also said that he made a train or came through a test "by the skin of his teeth." Always it means that he "had the break," that he had the benefit of just the right side of the dividing line.

Though it has a slangy tone, the phrase is time-honored and has an auspicious origin. For when Job, in the Old Testament was describing the miseries to which the Lord had subjected him, said: "I am escaped by the skin of my teeth," he coined a catch phrase which has come down to popular usage in present-day speech. One version has the original reference as: "I must sustain myself with the gums of my teeth."

My Neighbor Says:

MEND clothes, especially starched ones, before sending them to the laundry, so that when they are returned, clean and nicely folded, there will be no need to disarrange and crumple them for mending purposes.

Few people know how to hang sheets properly on the line. Shake them well while still wet and hang them with the hems together and the hem-edge pinned to the line. This prevents whipping the corners and lessens the wear and tear, while the sheet will need less pulling into shape for the ironing.

Beef or mutton drippings which are to be used for pastry should be beaten to a cream with a teaspoonful of baking powder and a few drops of lemon juice. If this is done the pastry will be much lighter.

EDITED BY DOROTHY EDMONDS

The Woman of the Shoe and Her New House

(As Told in Pictures.)

The old woman with all her children who wouldn't fit into the old shoe gathered them together and decided they must have a new house. So she went to the king's palace. The gatekeeper unlocked the gates and let the old woman with her children pass through. The doorkeeper haughtily opened the great door. The guard at the throne room drew back the velvet curtains and the king received them upon his golden throne. The king could do nothing without the beaver. The old woman and her children went to see the beaver at his request and told him the king wished him to cut down a tree to provide them with lumber. The beaver was glad to help and the carpenter sawed the tree into boards as soon as it was down. The children danced out upon the lawn and no longer did they have to live in a shoe. They lived in a very grand new house with room enough for all.

The Little Brother Francis of Assisi

Far away in the country of Italy, nestled cozily among the sharp peaks of the Umbrian mountains, is the tiny city of Assisi. It was in this city of Assisi, more than seven hundred years ago, that the Little Brother lived.

His father was a very rich merchant. Francis was his only son and he had many dreams of his growing to manhood and becoming as rich a man as he himself and a yet more powerful one. Francis was dressed in the finest of clothes and had everything for which a boy could wish. He was known as a child of joy, singing from morning till night songs that his mother taught him.

Often, had you lived in Assisi then, you might have seen him at the head of a group of other boys, singing and dancing and parading through the tiny, narrow streets. It was not strange then, that when he grew to be about sixteen and soldiers of enemy countries invaded the streets of Assisi, Francis took his place among the defenders and neither was it strange that one day he was taken prisoner and with others cast into a dark dungeon.

For a whole year he was forced to stay in prison but during all that time, though it was a cold, cheerless place, Francis kept his happy nature and used it to cheer the other prisoners.

At last the year drifted by and Francis was once more free, free to dance and sing with his companions. But alas! His year in the jail had made its mark. Something had happened to him. As he stood on a hill-top looking over his Assisi, his heart did not sing as usual. He seemed to see the city in a new light. In those days there were many, many poor people, many people sick and miserable. Francis had always loved everything beautiful, and misery or unhappiness were to him ugly things from which he would turn away. But now as he stood looking over his city, somehow or other, he could think of little else but the hundreds of miserable people who needed help.

His mother, Madonna Pica, as she was called, found him one day removing from the table all the fruits and good things to eat and packing them together as if he were going on a

"I don't want anyone to know it," asserted Mr. Case. "Nor do I wish them to know that Dorothy Parker or anyone else is in the hotel. If the news got circulated, some of the larger hotel keepers probably would kidnap them."

Carrying on the traditional ceremonies of Japanese "doo day," which have their root in religious beliefs formulated many centuries ago, more than 300 American-born Japanese children of the San Pedro (Calif.) school donned the beautiful and expensive costumes obtained by their parents for the celebration. The school, in the Japanese colony of fishermen, has more than 500 pupils.

Cladagh, the picturesque fishing village in Galway, may not be abandoned after all. For generations the interesting people, with their traditions of Spain and the Gael, have lived there, and the present generation likes the place. Recently the Free State government offered to build a new village for them, and the Cladaghites at first were enthusiastic, but after estimating the extra taxes and rents, they refused to desert their old thatched cottages for comfortable houses with slate roofs.

"I CUT MY SMOKING COST IN HALF AND DOUBLED MY PLEASURE!"

THAT'S a strong statement. But it's true. And Target Cigarette Tobacco is the answer. "I first started on Target to save money. I heard you could roll thirty or more cigarettes for a dime with Target. But that isn't all."

Target gives you the same taste you get in the best ready-made. And with those special gummed papers you get free with every package, you sure can roll plump, sweet smokes. I sure do get twice the pleasure and, of course, no one objects to saving fifty cents a week.

"I advise you to try Target, and enjoy the blend of Virginia, Burley and Turkish tobaccos just like in ready-mades."

AND GET THIS: The U. S. Government Tax on 20 cigarettes amounts to 6¢. On 20 cigarettes you roll from Target Tobacco the tax is just about 1¢. No wonder you get such value for a dime!

CHARACTER OF SOIL SHAPES MAN'S LIFE

Due to Plant Growth Peculiar to Certain Areas.

Washington.—"The character of the soil—the few inches or few feet of ground that form the outer skin of the earth—has very largely molded the way of life of millions of people throughout the world," says a bulletin from the National Geographic society.

"Other factors, such as moisture and temperature, are important in plant growth," continues the bulletin, "but the fundamental factor is the soil itself, the medium in which roots can anchor themselves, and from which they can draw their food supplies.

"The great loess region of north China is a striking example of the effect of soil on customs. This light loam, deposited by the wind, is easily drained, and none too well supplied with moisture. It dictates the growth of wheat and other hardy grains instead of rice. The northern Chinese, therefore, are non-rice eating folk. Their dry soil also decreases the raising of live stock; so it is here that China has its greatest concentration of sheep and cattle.

Flood Irrigation.

"The lower Yangtze valley forms a marked contrast to the loess region. With its basins of rich alluvial soil, which responds well to wet culture, it is the center of China's rice production. In this region the soil condition has brought about dependence almost exclusively on rice as a vegetable food, the practice of flood irrigation, and the raising of poultry rather than large farm animals.

"In the United States the great 'corn belt' near the center of the country has been marked out by deep, easily-penetrated soil, although temperature and moisture conditions also are important factors in making this the greatest maize-producing region of the world. Corn is an excellent food for animals. It is largely because of its soil and temperature, therefore, that this region has become the great cattle-fattening and hog-raising section of the United States.

"Two of man's chief luxuries, tobacco and wine, are more strongly affected by soil differences than almost any other agricultural products. In the United States cigar leaf tobacco is grown best on certain soils of the Connecticut valley, New York, Pennsylvania, Ohio, and Wisconsin. The Burley types grow on the blue-grass soils of Kentucky and adjoining states to the north; and the bright tobaccos, used in cigarettes, on the light soils of the Carolinas and nearby Virginia.

"The most famous Cuban tobacco, which has at times sold as high as $20 a pound, can be grown only on soil in about 25 square miles. Two other restricted areas produce the second and third most famous Cuban tobaccos. On special soils in Macedonia and Asia Minor are grown the celebrated Turkish tobaccos, with flavors and aromas that cannot be duplicated elsewhere.

"Each of the noted wines of France owes its special character to the soil on which the grapes grow.

"This priceless soil layer, on which all of the world's land vegetation and land animals are dependent, is nothing more than broken up bits of rock into which the decayed remains of vegetable and animal forms have been mixed. Chemically, there are three broad types of soil: alkaline, neutral, and acid. It is in accordance with their physical characteristics, however, that soils are usually classified.

"Sand is the soil of coarsest particles. Through it water drains easily, little being imprisoned, and not much mineral matter goes into solution from its hard grains. Pure sand, therefore, does not make a satisfactory soil for growing crops.

"At the other end of the scale, physically, is clay. Its particles are so fine that they are not found in a separate state, but stick together with water in large groups. Whereas pure sand is too 'light' for satisfactory crop production, pure clay is too 'heavy.'

"Between sand and clay lies the wide range of useful soils, made up of particles smaller than those of sand and larger than those of clay; or else of varying proportions of sand and clay, with the addition in most cases of mixtures of lime, other mineral salts, and decayed vegetable matter.

"The soil, as the feeding ground of plant roots, is in truth much more than a mere group of fragments of rock and humus. It consists of soil 'crumbs' composed of groups of microscopic particles; the obvious spaces between the crumbs; the unseen spaces within them; the water, air, and other gases that circulate between the crumbs and are imprisoned in them; minerals in solution, and the bacteria and microscopic animal life that exist underground. It is from the mineral solutions that surround and permeate the soil crumbs that the tiny rootlets draw most of their nourishment."

The Jockey is fitted with a nine-cylinder radial air-cooled engine, supercharged to yield 530 horsepower.

NEW YORK TAKES SURVEY OF SKYSCRAPER JUNGLE

Assessor Finds 93 Buildings Over 30 Stories.

New York.—Old Father Knickerbocker has started his annual inventory on his great and growing skyscraper jungle—for the benefit of the tax gathering man, as usual—and the count is providing its usual quota of new wonders to the proud populace. The array, of course, is "bigger and better than ever" this year—it always is. The current roll call shows a total of nearly 500 buildings of 20 stories or more in height and with an assessed valuation running well into the billions. Ninety-three of them tower a full 50 stories or more into cloudland and their combined value is on the books for nearly $500,000,000. They will pay at least $21,000,000 into the city treasury this year and nobody knows yet just how much the other 400 or so may add to the amount. Certainly the figure will be a bit staggering, even to a city accustomed to think in terms of millions when the matter of taxes and public expenditures is under consideration.

Four of the 93 "tallest" and a cluster of the lesser fry have been added to the total since the tax man was around last year. Chief of these is, of course, the new Empire State building, which towers a dizzy 86 stories above the street level and becomes thereby not only the majordomo of New York skyscrapers but the last word in tall buildings the world over. Two years ago the Chrysler building, which reaches 77 stories into the empyrean blue, claimed first place on the list, while only three years back it was the 55-story Woolworth building, now—alas!—down to sixth place on the roster.

While not quite completed the new Citicorp Service building which towers 950 feet above Pine street down in the heart of the financial district is given third place on the taxman's 1932 roll while fourth place goes to the Manhattan company building hard by, rising 927 feet above the busy Wall Street throngs.

Each of the complete skyscrapers is, of course, virtually a city within the greater city. Each has its governing board, comparable to the city council or board of aldermen, with a superintendent or manager officiating as "mayor," a "police" force consisting of its many uniformed watchmen scattered on every floor, its rapid transit system, i. e. elevators, and its floor upon floor of teeming workers encased in offices separated by corridors, so long and spacious they might well pass for city streets. Some of the working populations of these perpendicular cities run high into the thousands.

Positively No Use for Poor Cow in Dairy Herd

"It makes no difference how you spell it," says C. G. Brant, of the anti-husbandry department at the New York State College of Agriculture, "they have no place in the dairy herd, whether you know them as 'border' cows or 'border' cows. If they are boarding at your expense you can't afford to keep them, or if they are on the border line between profit and loss they ought to be pushed over the edge to make way for animals that are sure to pay."

A single sheet of paper properly used may help to keep the New York state dairy industry on its feet. The cow appraisal blank is devised to help dairymen to weigh each cow's merits and to answer the question—will it pay to keep this cow?

This blank, which is available from the dairy department of the college of agriculture at Ithaca, has spaces to list the age, date the cow was last fresh, when she is due to freshen, her production record in pounds of milk and her test, number of sound quarters, whether she is a regular breeder, and lastly the question—will it pay to keep this cow?

Women Refused Ballot by Quebec Legislature

Quebec.—Standing true to its traditions as the stronghold of Old world conservatism in the New world, the province of Quebec remains the only section of the British empire where women are still forbidden to vote.

By a vote of 52 to 23 the legislature has refused to extend the franchise taking the stand that "women should be queens of their homes and not political intriguers or hustling loafers."

The question was not decided along party lines, for two Liberal members sponsored the bill which would have given women the vote while other Liberals were equally strong in opposing it.

Dr. Anatole Plante, sponsor of the bill, argued that the present situation placed Quebec women in a position of inferiority to those of other Canadian provinces.

DAIRY FACTS

CHOOSE HERD SIRE WITH EXTRA CARE

Highly Important Factor in Milk Production.

Milk production is what is known as a cumulative quality; that is it depends on more than one hereditary character. For this reason it is more difficult to hold the quality of high production and at the same time get high quality (butterfat) than it is to retain a single quality, like color. It is therefore very important that heavy milk production should be a dominant character in both the dam and the sire. Strange as it may at first appear, the male line seems to have more influence in stamping high milk production on the progeny than does the female.

This means that extra care should be exercised in selecting a sire to head a purebred herd. The chief reason given by dairymen for changing sires once in five or six years is that most breeders do not care to use a bull to breed on his own daughters and in the case of a small herd, two head bulls are too expensive a proposition. This situation may be overcome by two breeders, keeping the same breed, agreeing to each buy a choice bull with the understanding that they shall exchange bulls, when the difficulty of too close breeding presents itself.

While too much dependence is commonly placed on type yet care must be used to look for those external qualities that indicate vigor of constitution. These qualities are likewise inherited and the production qualities of a bull are of no great value unless the animal has a degree of constitutional vigor that will make him a good feeder with plenty of vim at all times.—Charles S. Phelps, in Rural New Yorker.

Better Bulls Build Fat

In seven years Joe Degenhardt, Monroe county, Wisconsin, added 87 pounds to the average fat production of his cows by using a purebred Holstein bull on native cows. He had the milk tested at the cheese factory in the beginning. By weeding out the dairymen to weigh each cow's merits and to answer the question—will it pay to keep this cow?

This blank, which is available from the dairy department of the college of agriculture at Ithaca, has spaces to list the age, date the cow was last fresh, when she is due to freshen, her production record in pounds of milk and her test, number of sound quarters, whether she is a regular breeder, and lastly the question—will it pay to keep this cow?

How Milks Compare

Comparisons of Jersey and Holstein milk with goat milk showed that in nutritive properties, including vitamin content, no one milk showed marked superiority over the other two, according to the bureau of animal industry, United States Department of Agriculture. Jersey milk was found to contain somewhat more vitamin A and goat milk contained more of vitamins B and C. The vitamin D content of all three milks, produced in both winter and summer, was found to be low. The vitamin D content of all three milks was approximately the same. Goat and Holstein milk were found to be somewhat similar in content of protein, fat and total nutrients, and Jersey milk was higher than either in these constituents.

DAIRY FACTS

Butterfat is bringing a better price relatively than feed, so why stint the good dairy cow?

About 2 per cent more creamery butter was manufactured in the United States in 1931 than in 1930.

If a cow is giving more than 20 pounds of milk a day it pays to feed her grain.

A World's Record

MORE than three thousand births without a single loss of either mother or child! That is the official Platt County record of Dr. W. B. Caldwell, in fifty years' family practice in Illinois.

No wonder mothers have such entire confidence in giving little ones Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin!

If you have a baby, you have constant need of this wonderful preparation of pure pepsin, active senna, and fresh herbs. A child who gets this gentle stimulant for the stomach, liver and bowels is always healthier. It keeps children's delicate systems from clogging. It will overcome the most stubborn condition of constipation. It builds them up, and is nothing like the strong cathartics that sap their strength and energy.

A coated tongue or bad breath is the signal for a spoonful of Syrup Pepsin. Children take it readily, for it is really delicious in flavor. Taste it! Take Syrup Pepsin yourself, when sluggish or bilious, or you are troubled with sick headaches and no appetite. Take some for several days when run-down, and see how it picks you up.

It is a prescription preparation which every drug store has ready; in big bottles, just ask anywhere for Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin.

Real munificence consists in ordering on the dining car a generous meal without looking at the bill of fare.

POLITICIANS WORK A RACKET IN AGRICULTURE

Farmer Has Been "Assisted" Into Beggary—He Has Been Given Everything Except An Opportunity to Achieve His Own Independence —Waste and More Waste

(From National Sphere, Washington, D. C.)

Neither this nor any other government has ever witnessed anything so scandalous as the racketeering perpetrated under the pretense of service to agriculture. It has become common practice for politicians to do their harvesting inside the treasury vaults.

The Farm Board was a monstrosity in conception and became a stench in operation. It has deprived thousands of men of their livelihood and, in so doing, far from helping agricultural prices, has actually depressed them. The mass credit of the thousands of local buyers who were declared "unclean" was greater than that of the government, extravagant as it was, could put behind the market.

A half a billion dollars, taxpayers' dollars, have gone into an experiment that proved to be a shambles for the farmers. They might as well have gone fishing for angels in Hades as to have believed they would get anything from handing their marketing over to the government. When they began to look to Washington, instead of their fields, for profits, they made a contract with disaster and they have found him a hard taskmaster.

Last year, the Congress was persuaded to turn millions over to the Secretary of Agriculture for seed loans. He had no machinery for finance. Scandals were sure to develop, and they have developed. In one country there were more fraudulent than legitimate advances made. Agents of the Department of Justice have been busy in several of the states to see what can be done about the frauds. But it is loudly shouted that something over 50 per cent of the advances has been repaid. Fifty per cent! Is there any solvency in that?

More Millions

Then came the President's proposal for the Reconstruction Finance Corporation. "We want ours," cried the very people who had voted so jubilantly for the Farm Board. So, it was voted to set aside $50,000,000 of the corporation's capital for agricultural advances, and one-half of anything got by issuing debentures. Through what machinery? Why, the men who were to administer the Act in its main features would have nothing to do with this special provision. There are some people who can smell a skunk afar off. So, with the record of the seed loan adventure before it, or available, Congress voted to turn the fund over to the Secretary of Agriculture. Farm man! In lieu of any adequate machinery, he may have to sweat it about with plows.

Content? Not by any means, for the Reconstruction Corporation can hardly get down to work, calling for funds from the treasury only as it needs them, when the politicians again rise up to plead for the farmers' votes. They want the entire possible $200,000,000 for agriculture made available at once. The argument, if so it may be called, is that the money is needed for this year's crops.

Well, the whole machinery of the government put together could not distribute $200,000,000 purposes over the next few weeks without so much graft and fraud that fecency would hide its face in humiliation.

Content? No, indeed. The $125,000,000 subscribed to the Land Banks by the government to relieve those who got funds on easy terms from these establishments is not enough. It is proposed, in addition, Constitution or no Constitution, to compel the banks to accept their own bonds at par in payment of interest obligation, principal or interest.

Do the Intermediate Credit Banks suffice? No, there must be $100,000,000 advanced by the government to furnish capital for the credit associations which are on the basis of that capital, to have access to the banks.

Content? Hardly. It is demanded that the government guarantee prices for farm products. The proposal cannot pass, for even farm politicians have some sense of shame, but it has enjoyed formidable support.

Stupefied and Demoralized

Exemption from the anti-trust laws, special consideration here, there and everywhere! So is agriculture stupefied, demoralized and over-whelmed. No sooner does the good farmer begin to get anywhere than the government steps in and subsidizes his careless neighbor. It is the government that brings the marginal lands back into production, and, preaching crop restriction with bullish bellowing uses both hands to force surplus production.

This great, fine, splendid industry, a natural reservoir for independent citizenship, has been corrupted and almost overwhelmed by the government. That is what the politicians have done to agriculture. Farm politicians have literally made beggars of their constituents.

Farmer Deserves A Chance
What the farmer needs is a chance to save himself. He needs some national policies that give him a fair opportunity. He has been handed charity, instead. Heaven only knows what he is paying for fair-haired computers and "experts" to write pamphlets for him about the itch on mules, or what to do with discarded buggies, or how to make his wife crazy by depriving her of the opportunity of doing any useful work in the house.

They have made the poor farmer drunk with advice. It would be a little difficult, of course, to curtail the activities of a Department which was instituted for political reasons and is kept for similar considerations. Certainly a private corporation, intelligently organized, could do more for the good of the farmer, at one-quarter the expense, than the Department of Agriculture ever will do.

It is absolutely vital to this country that the warm industry be prosperous, secure and self-reliant. The only way it can become so is to take the government's fingers from its throat. The farmers have been voting too long for politicians whose chief activity has been to enslave them. They might wisely begin to ask some of these men: "How about our taxes?"

IS APPOINTED GUARDIAN

Horley F. Saylor has been named in the DeKalb circuit court as guardian of Eloise Saylor, 14, and Marion Saylor, 11 heirs of the late Wm. H. Baltz. The children own $35 in real estate and Mr. Saylor filed $100 bond with W. Grant Baltz and Clyde Hart as sureties. The court authorized the guardian to sell the real estate, consisting of one-fifth interest in 60 acres of land. The interest was appraised at $35 by Roy Koch and M. E. Storer and the guardian filed $70 additional bond with the same sureties.

Our own idea is that Congress ought to pass a law prohibiting the circulation of bill collectors on one day out of each week.

CLAIMS vs FACTS

CLAIMS	FACTS
Prohibition enforcement costs the country billions of dollars.	Total cost of enforcement, 1920 to '31, $284,156,524; collections from fines and penalties and revenues from taxes on unlawful and distilled and fermented liquors, $548,588,884. The net is a balance in favor of the Government of $264,432,260. Col. Amos W. W. Woodcock, Director of Prohibition.

Prohibition has caused an enormous economic loss.	Total national wealth in 1914 was $192,000,000,000; in 1931 it was $329,700,000,000. — National Industrial Conference Board, Feb. 20, 1932.

Repealing prohibition would put 1,000,000,000 men to work.	Department of Commerce reported to the Senate, January 11, 1932, in 1914 only 86,000 men employed in the manufacture of liquor. "Increased employment in the brewery industry would take that much away from the soft drink trade and there would be no net gain in total employees of all industries." Bureau of Business Research, College of the City of New York.

Beer will bring prosperity.	"To encourage the return of the saloon or even let up our efforts to control the drink trade will injure every legitimate industry in two ways: The average worker will have fewer dollars to spend for the products of industry; second, the liquor trade will get more of these dollars which ought to go for useful industries." — Thos. Nixon Carver, Professor of Political Economy, Harvard University.
-----------------------------	---

Beer taxed three cents a bottle would produce $1,000,000,000 a year revenue.	To raise this fabulous revenue would require a consumption of 12½ gallons of beer daily by every family in states permitting beer.
---	--

Repealing prohibition would permit the Government to levy an internal revenue tax on liquor amounting to $2,000,000,000 a year.	Highest liquor tax ever received was $483,000,000 which included a special war tax in 1919. Average years liquor tax was less than 10 per cent of what was promised.
--	---

Prohibition has lost billions of dollars in taxes to the Government.	In the first decade of prohibition, although cost of government increased as the country increased, the Government paid off billions of indebtedness and reduced income taxes.
--	--

Prohibition has increased drinking.	The government measured the amount of hops, corn sugar, rye, barley, etc., raised and imported, subtracted the amounts used in known legal enterprises and reported the amount of raw material left would make less than a third of the former liquor consumption.—Col. Woodcock's testimony before sub-committee of House appropriations Committee, January 21, 1932.

What would you do for your Buddy?
What can you do for your comrad's Buddy?

Memorial Day is the answer to that problem.
Now Friends, Comrads and Buddies let's make Memorial Day one that we can be proud of, one that will ease our conscience, for all the neglect we have been guilty of on former Memorial Days.

We have been given the privilege to take over the program for this year and let's do it, and do it up right.

Let's make a permanent Memorial Day organization, and we can if we get together once a year and plan for this one day. You will all be surprised at the amount of satisfaction you will derive from it.

What do you say if we have a meeting on the night of Tuesday, April 26, at 8:00 o'clock at the Town Hall.

I would like to see every man there that ever wore a uniform, whether he served in Peace or War, Army or Navy, Marines or "Swiss Horse Marines."

DEKALB COUNTY BOY IN RACE FOR REPRESENTATIVE

Col. Alfred L. Moudy, candidate for State Representative, was born and reared on a farm in DeKalb County. He now owns and operates a small farm in Wilmington Township.

He attended the Public Schools, was graduated from Tri-State College and later attended Columbia University and Colorado State University. He spent twenty years as a teacher and superintendent of schools in this county.

He has had wide experience as a soldier having served all ranks from an enlisted man to Lt. Colonel of Field Artillery. He served on the Mexican Border and during the entire period of the World War. After the armistice was signed he served as an Educational director of the American Expeditionary Forces in France and Germany. He is a member of the American Legion Post 206, Waterloo.

During the past eight years his services have been given to Americanization and Educational lectures. His lecture tours have taken him into every state of the Union and he has delivered more than 3,000 addresses to High Schools, Colleges, Churches and Civic Organizations.

Col. Moudy is a student of government and if nominated and elected as State Representative will bring to the office a liberal education, a wealth of experience, and an analytical mind in the solution of the problems of the state. Adv.

HOME BUREAU

About forty members of the Home Bureau met at the pleasant country home of Mr. and Mrs. Sam Wyatt, April 15. The club sang several songs led by the chorister, Mrs. Hattie Johnson. The ladies responded to roll call by stating some facts of Indiana trees. A paper on "What makes a house a home" was given by Mrs. Pearl Simanton, who also conducted a round table on the same subject, in which all the ladies took a lively interest. This was followed by a saxophone and piano quartet by Mrs. Lela Northrup and Mrs. Pluma Hamilton.

Landscaping farm homes, food stuffs, electricity in the home was ably given by Mrs. Hamilton. The project leaders, Mrs. Grace Sheffer and Mrs. Hazel Nichols gave a very interesting talk on the blending of colors, different kinds of silk, and the making of silk scarfs. A playlet, "Trying to raise the price of butter," proved to be amusing and was given by Vada Wyatt, Laura Washler, Lina Thorp, Mary Washler and Hazel Nichols.

The committee served brick ice cream, angel food cake, devil food cake and coffee. Five visitors and several children were present. Club adjourned to meet May 20 with Mrs. Nettie Cuiabertson as hostess.

CONGRESSMAN HOGG MAKES PLEA IN CONGRESS

(Special to St. Joe News)

Washington, D. C., April 19th.

"To compel despotic organizations of vast wealth to operate in accordance with honest principles is the supreme question before the American people today," declared Congressman David Hogg of Indiana in a recent address before the House of Representatives.

"At the present rate of increase two groups of capitalists will, in forty years own exactly one-half of the United States. Purchasing power cannot be restored under such conditions. Banks must guarantee deposits," said Mr. Hogg.

In discussing the present situation Congressman Hogg said:

"The economic catastrophe in 1929 did not just happen. It was the result of the uncontrolled greed of selfish interests which occupied strategic places in our economic life. They collected too large a part of the earnings of the enlightenment and energy of this generation.

America, A. D. 1929

"In 1929, 500 individuals, had an income of $1,185,000,000. Seven hundred had an income equivalent to that of 2,000,000 farmers. Eighty-five had a million dollar greater income than the total income of the 420,000 men engaged in clothing manufacturing industry.

"Four per cent of the population of America owned 85 per cent of all the wealth of the Nation. Sixty million citizens had practically nothing. Two groups alone held 341 directorships in 112 banks, railroad, insurance, and other corporations. One man of this group made the boast that 12 men in the United States controlled the business of the Nation.

"During the period of the World War to the depression beginning in 1929, wages and prices, both retail and wholesale, remained practically the same. The average productive capacity of all individuals in industry during that time increased 55 per cent. The groups controlling our industrial life could have lowered prices materially and thus produced an increased demand for goods that would have enabled the farmer who had only a small income to buy. But industries kept the profits, which had increased on an average of 72 per cent. Then having secured the profits and not seeing the handwriting on the wall, they overexpanded their business.

"Within this time total national income increased less than 10 per cent. The number of men with incomes of over a million dollars increased 1,400 per cent, or one hundred and forty times as fast. And the amount of money these men made in one year increased 1,300 per cent, or one hundred and thirty times as fast as the total amount of money made by everybody in the whole United States.

Installment Buying

"Farm implements were so high that the farmer could not buy without going heavily into debt. Nor could he buy the other products of American factories because of high prices and his own low purchasing power.

"To stimulate the dwindling market, installment buying was urged andajoled on the public far beyond reason. It was usually financed by a heavy overcharge. By this method the worker in the city kept up the market for an additional time. With the farmer practically bankrupt, the city worker overburdened with debt, and markets gone, a great scheme was hit upon by speculators.

The Deluge

"International Telephone and Telegraphic stock was put to the public at 194. It shrunk to 26. The investors lost $820,000,000. Montgomery Ward & Co. was sold at 156. It shrunk to 18. The investors' loss was only $640,000,000. General Electric went to the public at 110. It shrunk to 45. The investors lost $1,580,000,000. General Motors sold at 92. It shrunk to 52. The investors lost $2,610,000,000.

"A survey of 25 leading stocks and securities shows a loss to investors of $16,000,000,000.

Washington's Mount Vernon

Mount Vernon, America's Most Hallowed Shrine.

(Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)—WNU service. MOUNT VERNON is basking in the spotlight of the two-hundredth anniversary celebration of George Washington's birth. Normally the estate is visited by nearly 400,000 people annually, but 1932 pilgrimages are expected to break all records.

"Mount Vernon is pleasantly situated in a high, dry, healthy country 800 miles by water from the sea on one of the finest rivers in the world," said George Washington, in describing his estate to a friend in 1793.

At the foot of the hill topped by the beautiful colonial mansion of the first President, spreads the broad Potomac. The high, pillared east portico of the mansion offers a splendid view of the river and the wooded beauty of the Maryland hills beyond, though lofty trees which stud the estate's spacious lawns and steel terraces. The west front of the mansion faces the vast farm land once carefully supervised by its illustrious owner.

Uncertainty shrouds the origin of the present mansion. Certain of the records indicate that Lawrence Washington began its construction, while others seem to show that his father built it.

The first white proprietors of the site of Mount Vernon were two old prospectors, who by authority of the royal governor patented it nearly 300 years ago. They made no effort, however, to comply with the provision of the law which required them to place tenants on the property, and in consequence their title to 4,000 acres reverted to the commonwealth.

In 1674 the patent to the land, along with some additional acreage, was reissued by Lord Culpeper to John Washington and Nicholas Spencer. Three Washingtons held the land before it came into the possession of Augustine, father of Lawrence and George, who purchased it from his sister for $300 and built the first house on it about 1734. This small dwelling was burned five years later, and its owner moved with his family to a farm near Fredericksburg, where he died in 1743.

George Washington died in 1747. Under the provisions of his will, the estate on the Potomac passed to Augustine's son Lawrence, who made his residence there and gave the place its name in honor of Admiral Vernon, of the British navy, under whom he had campaigned against the Spaniards in the West Indies and for whom he entertained a deep respect and affection. In 1747 George Washington came to Mount Vernon to make his permanent home with his high-minded and cultured half-brother.

During Lawrence Washington's mastership, Mount Vernon began to assume a position of some importance in the colony. The able young proprietor was active in public affairs. He was appointed adjutant of his military district by the royal governor and several times represented his county in the Virginia house of burgesses.

Lawrence Washington died in 1752, and left Mount Vernon to his infant daughter, Sarah, who survived her father by only a few months. On her death the property went to George. Before he had reached his majority, George Washington was the sole proprietor of Mount Vernon, then an estate of 2,700 acres.

The Mount Vernon of 1752 and that of today, which is essentially as George Washington left it, were not much alike. The house was a simple one, without the present mansion's third story, banquet hall, library, or the chambers above these additions. Neither did it have the colonnades or the great portico overlooking the river. The old brick barn, built by Augustine Washington nearly twenty years earlier, had survived the fire that destroyed his house and is still standing, the oldest structure on the estate.

Like most Virginians of his day, the future Father of His Country was possessed of a lively land hunger, and by gradual acquisition he increased his Mount Vernon property from the 2,700 acres which he had inherited to a domain of approximately 8,000 acres.

The management of so great a holding presented large problems of administration, but no man in the colonies was better fitted than George Washington to meet them successfully. He was by nature an instinctive farmer, and he found his greatest happiness in his marriage and the care and development of his home.

But Washington was not content to be a country gentleman who farmed in the disinterested manner then generally in vogue in Virginia. He early realized that extensive and unbroken tobacco planting was ruinous to the soil. At Mount Vernon he grew only so much tobacco as was absolutely necessary in an age when the sporadic leaf served as a medium of exchange. Wheat, corn, turnips, and hay he raised extensively, pursuing a careful system of crop rotation and fertilizing his fields liberally.

First Experimental Farm. Mount Vernon was the first real experimental farm on the North American continent. Washington made of his estate an agricultural laboratory, wherein he put to practical application the new theories of soil cultivation and stock breeding that were then being expounded successfully in England.

For years prior to the revolution, he experimented in a comparatively small way, and while the struggle for liberty put an end to these activities for a time, it enabled him frequently to come in contact with the methods of agriculture used in the other colonies. As a result, he accumulated much valuable information which he put to good use in later years.

His return after the war marked the beginning of an era of energetic effort to improve and beautify the place he loved so well. Plants, seeds, and cuttings were imported from Europe, while many more were received from friends, both at home and abroad.

In General Washington's day mules were not commonly used in America and those that were seem to have been of an inferior breed. He made earnest efforts to better the stock and was greatly aided in his experiments along this line by two gifts from abroad. Lafayette sent him two spirited jennies and a jack from the Isle of Malta, while the king of Spain also made him a present of a similar trio of high-bred Spanish stock.

Seed and soil tests were undertaken, as well as stock breeding, and the general engaged in a voluminous correspondence with the leading agricultural experts in Europe. To have achieved the productivity that he did from Mount Vernon's naturally none too fertile acres is a standing tribute to the agricultural genius of Washington, the farmer and, together with the many successful experiments he conducted there, justified the use of that title which pleased him most—"The First Farmer of America."

His Thrashing Barn. General Washington's capacity for the practical application of his advanced agricultural theories was in evidence in the large barn which he built on the Dogue Run farm. It was a 16-sided brick structure, the construction of which he supervised and the plans for which he drew. The bricks for it were baked on the estate, and among its unique features was a circular threshing floor, the boards of which were laid so as to leave regular and frequent interstices, through which the failed or trodden grain could fall into bins built beneath.

A motive which probably impelled the master of Mount Vernon to include this innovation in his new barn was his abhorrence of wasted time. By providing a good threshing place indoors, he was able to be independent of the weather in preparing his grain and made it unnecessary for his slaves to remain idle because of rain or cold.

For greater convenience, the Mount Vernon estate was divided into five farms, ranging in size from the comparatively small mansion house farm to the river farm of 2,027 acres. On each of these there were slave quarters, an overseer's house, and barns and other outbuildings. On one of them, the Union farm, there was a brick barn, which Washington described in a letter to Arthur Young in December, 1793, as "equal, perhaps, to any in America, and for convenience of all sorts, particularly for sheltering and feeding horses, cattle, etc., scarcely to be exceeded anywhere." An overseer was in direct charge of each of these farms, but General Washington did not leave the management entirely in their hands.

Just before the Revolution General and Mrs. Washington had come to the conclusion that the demands upon them for entertaining would necessitate an enlargement of their residence. Work actually began in the spring of 1775, but before it was more than started the master was called away to take command of the army. His kinsman, Lund Washington, took over its active direction, but the interior construction work was not completed until 1780, after the general's return. The mansion, as it stood then and as it stands today, was of Virginia pine sheathing, designed and painted to resemble stone blocks, and built over a framework of oak. The foundations were of brick and real sandstone; the roof of cypress shingles.

Practically all the food consumed was raised on the place. The slaves subsisted largely on corn meal, pork, turnips, and a few other vegetables, all of which were home grown. For the use of the table in the great house, wheat, fruits, sheep, and cattle were raised. The hospitality at Mount Vernon was bountiful and seldom did the Washington family sit down to dinner alone

TO END MOISTURE IN MILK HOUSE

Proper Insulation Will Put Stop to Nuisance.

A subscriber complains that moisture collects on the ceiling of his milkroom, which is built as an addition to his dairy stable and with a self-closing door. He asks how he can plaster the ceiling and walls.

The moisture condensation is due to lack of insulation and lack of ventilation. A layer of good sheet insulation on top of the ceiling joists would take care of the insulation of the ceiling pretty well. Then you should have about a 10 by 10 or 10 by 12 outtake fan starting at the ceiling and going up through the roof and capped with a regular barn ventilator. This should have a valve at the bottom operated by a chain, so that it can be partly or entirely closed, as may be necessary to keep the temperature where you want it.

Also your walls probably need insulating before you plaster. The patent plaster board helps a good deal, but an extra sheet of insulation if the walls are of blocks, or the extra sheet with the studding spaces filled with dry sawdust or shavings if of frame construction, will add a lot to the warmth. But if you insulate the ceiling and put in a ventilator, you probably will have no further trouble.—Wallace Farmer.

To Feed Grain Properly One Must "Know" Herd

Feeding grain economically to cows requires in the first place that we know what each cow in the herd is producing. This, in turn, means that we must weigh the milk from each cow at fairly frequent intervals and have samples of the milk tested for butterfat. Granted that we know the production of each cow, a rough and ready rule is to feed one pound of grain to each four pounds of milk produced by Holstein cows testing around 3.5 per cent fat. Extra good producers—say cows producing 60 to 60 pounds of milk daily—will require a larger proportion of grain than this and cows near the end of lactation period and giving 15 pounds or less will not require as much. There will never be a rule so good that the feeder will not have to rely somewhat on his own judgment. An Ayrshire cow, giving richer milk, might have a pound of grain to three and a half pounds of milk, a Guernsey one to three and a Jersey one to two and three-quarters pounds.

Raise Only Good Calves

Healthy calves are advocated as a sure source of healthy, producing dairy cattle. Dairywomen who add to their herds by purchase frequently increase their troubles, according to Dr. J. P. Iverson, chief of the California division of animal industry, because it rarely happens that healthy, producing cows can be bought cheap. Doctor Iverson stresses that only good calves and good cows of known production and good type should be raised. Such calves, he says, when segregated soon after birth and fed milk, pasteurized, or known to be from tuberculosis-free cattle, become desirable dairy cows, free from disease.

Feed More Grain

A study of market prices gives a lot of food for thought just now, especially for the dairy farmer who buys a lot of his feed. A couple of years ago nutrients could be purchased cheaply in clover hay, while timothy was at a fourth on the list at $13 per ton. Now, according to computations of a contemporary, timothy is the most expensive of feeds and red clover is a more expensive feed than oats, wheat, alfalfa hay, barley, gluten feed and shorts. The change in price levels means that farmers can profitably cut down on the amount of hay fed, and feed grain more liberally.

Watch Profits

A recent test at the Mitchell, Nebraska, experiment station shows that cows on roughage alone produced milk and butterfat cheaper but the total value of the product above feed cost was less than with cows which received grain in addition to the roughage. James A. Holden, who conducted the test, sums it up by saying that the cows receiving grain paid more than the market price for it. He adds that farmers having cows capable of producing over 300 pounds of butterfat for a year on silage and hay alone will find that it pays to add a good grain mixture at present feed prices.—Successful Farming.

Eradicating Tuberculosis

During the year ending December 31, 1931, 3,446 initial tests were conducted upon 121,704 cattle, according to the January 21 report of Dr. E. T. Pauller, director of the bureau of animal industry of the New York department of Agriculture and Markets. The report goes on to say that 43,089 reactors were revealed, or 35.3 per cent. 3,632 herds were found infected, or 42.8 per cent. It also states that 4,314 herds revealed no tuberculosis.—American Agriculturist.

Trimming Ideas for Wash Frocks

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

SPRINGTIME is here, which brings thoughts of the sewing campaign which is and ever will be at this season of the year.

Here's a timely word of advice, be sure to stock your work basket and your sewing cabinet with a goodly assortment of crochet hooks and crochet threads and yarns, for a touch of hand crochet is the call of the hour. Paris is all enthusiasm on the crochet subject and so is every style-wise American woman and her next-door neighbor.

It is taken for granted that you have been buying up all sorts of wash materials in anticipation of this annual sewing boom, for who can resist the lure of the perfectly lovely cottons, rayons and linens and washable silks which have been so temptingly on display throughout the various fabric departments this many a day.

As usual the "stiff small voice" is bidding mother to consider the needs of the little folks of the household first. Which is the reason why we are showing this group of interesting styles for children. Seeing that hand crochet is so exceedingly popular, why not adorn little daughter's bright washable-print school frock with neck trim and sleeve bands of hand crochet. They will give an air of distinction to her gown such as only handwork can give.

These little crochet pieces are as easy to do as an entire set like that which adorns the frock to the left in the picture can be made in one evening while listening in on the radio. The short story hour would afford sufficient time, for the stitch is easy and the strips are straight. Since the tub material selected for the frock shown is brown with orange and ecru tiny figures, the thread for the neckband and cuffs is also an ecru shade. The french mesh, flit, or even the modified Irish crochet stitch may be employed with equal effect. Use 30 to 50 numbered crochet thread and a No. 10 or 8 steel crochet hook.

The neckband and cuffs are applied with a trim stitch thread in one of the colors of the design in the fabric. The trim stitch is done on the machine. Use the coarsest of machine needles, and set the gauge for nine or ten stitches to the inch. Bias trim in orange shade outlines the clever yoke effect at the waistline.

Speaking of bias trim, any young girl will be most delighted with a plaid gypsy girle with head band to match, such as is worn by the seated figure sketched above to the left. The idea is to stitch bias trim in various colors outlining a plaid design as is shown. This is really a unique idea and one which can be worked very effectively in a trimming way. Jade, scarlet, pilot blue, orange and black bias trim make a striking combination when plaided as suggested.

Just as novel and interesting is the braided hothand and girle which the other young miss is wearing. This set is also made of bias trim, such as can be bought by the bolt at any notion counter. Fold the bias trim in half, and fasten the ends with thumb tacks to a desk blotter or pad. Then interlace the strips firmly, continuing with pins to hold in position as you proceed from one side to the other. The hat band may be made a little narrower than the belt, using five instead of seven strips.

The little girl who is going stepping, in the foreground of the picture, has her pretty white blouse smocked to perfection, in gay colors.

COLOR FEATURE OF SPRING ENSEMBLES

The color theme is a predominating feature of many of the new spring ensembles. A dark coat with a light touch is worn with a light frock that boasts a dark note to match the coat, and there is the ensemble. Of course, it is not quite as simple as all that, but this color scheme is certainly extremely popular here.

You will like the new ensembles, for they certainly are different from almost anything shown for many a season, most attractive and wearable, and refreshingly new. Fine materials and furs are used. The frocks often boast a very complicated cut and yet the outcome is an apparently simple costume, without any trace of the opulent or lavish.

Pale Beige Is Favored for Spring Ensembles

Beige may be announced with authority as one of the smart shades for spring. It returns to fashion very pale after an absence of several years. Many a woman will give thanks for this return, as it is both a becoming and a practical shade.

The bright colors that have been high style items for more than a year are being seriously menaced by beige and other neutral colors. It looks as if these gaudy shades might be pushed out of the style picture in another few months. They've had a pretty good day, and may well have run their course.

Be that as it may, though, you will do well to keep this prophecy well in mind, beige is in again. It is being used by the great French dressmakers for jacket ensembles that are going to be smart next spring and that may be worn under the fur coat instantly.

CORDUROY PRINT

By CHERIE NICHOLAS

Corduroy goes printed for this smart pajama ensemble which is carried out in the ever good-looking black and white combination. The strictly tailored lines are featured this season for pajama costumes which go cruising, or strolling on the beach, or which enter into sports of any description.

Jackets, Jackets! Jackets are an integral part of the season's dress. They range from bolero to finger-tip lengths.

Put Bees in Right Section of Orchard

Point Discovered to Be of Much Importance.

One virtue of honey bees, of finishing a job they start, may prove embarrassing to fruit growers. According to Prof. L. H. McDaniel of the New York State College of Agriculture, beekeepers call this characteristic constancy, which means that when bees once start working on a certain kind of blossoms in a certain place they continue working there until the supply of nectar or pollen is exhausted.

Last year one New York orchardist had poor results from using bees and bonquets, because the bees placed in the apple orchard worked in a nearby cherry orchard and did not visit the apple blossoms while the bonquets were shedding pollen. Similar difficulties have been experienced in the Pacific Northwest where bees are likely to visit sagebrush blossoms on surrounding hills rather than the apple blossoms unless the apple blossoms are open when the bees are brought to the orchard.

Bees are interested mainly in nectar gathering, and not the problem of cross-pollination. However, honey bees are by far the most important insect which transfer pollen and their use deserves careful consideration by orchardists, Professor McDaniel advises.

Soybeans Put Forward as Quick Legume Crop

What can I plant as a quick legume crop? This question is at hand from several different states. Alfalfa is recognized as the great legume forage, but it cannot be grown in one season or in every place. Many are looking toward soybeans as a solution. There is no doubt about their value, but they have their troublesome points in growth and harvesting. Soybeans are a warm-weather crop, to be planted about the same time as corn, or a little later. They may be sown in rows 30 inches apart, cultivated, or drilled like oats. For hay they are cut after the pods are well formed, but before the lower leaves turn yellow. Soybean hay is one of the best forages for grinding in the modern fodder mills. In that way the rather coarse stalks are all worked up into easily eaten form. The hay itself will run around 12 per cent protein, and the beans as high as 30.—Rural New-Yorker.

Rotation Proves Value

A rotation including a legume and a cultivated crop has increased the wheat yield on Stockton Brothers farm in Polk county, Oregon, 15 bushels an acre.

The Stockton family had produced grain on this farm for 60 years. Yields gradually had decreased to 25 bushels. Four years ago the brothers instituted a rotation of corn followed by clover and thereafter by wheat. In 1931 wheat following such a rotation yielded 40 bushels. The cultivated crop also has aided in weed control and spread out the farm work.—J. R. Beck in Capper's Farmer.

Legume "Bugs"

All other things being equal, the legume inoculant that contains the largest number of bacteria will be the one to use. Abundance of bacteria means just that many more for each seed. Some of the inoculating bacteria will die anyway; some will never reach the plants' root systems; some will be washed away; and the inoculant containing the largest numbers will have just that many more after losses have thinned the ranks. Pay safe—be sure the inoculant contains a large number of efficient bacteria.—Farmer's Journal.

It's Best to Thin

To many people it seems almost a crime to pick off a part of the small fruits on peach or apple trees which are carrying a heavy load of fruit. However, experiments have proved that the thinning of peaches to a distance of 6 inches between fruits, and apples to only one fruit on one-half of the spurs on the tree, will reduce the cost of thinning and will give fruit of more value.—Kansas Farmer.

Agricultural Notes

Dull knives in the ensilage cutter increase the power requirement about 50 per cent.

A total of 60,857 common barberry bushes were eradicated in Wisconsin last year, according to V. O. Taylor, agent in charge.

If the garden is carefully planned two vegetables a day will be provided for summer use and two vegetables a day can be canned or stored for winter use.

More than one-fifth of the total crop of broom corn produced in the United States in 1931 was farmed in Illinois.

Two dollars' worth of superphosphate spread on an acre of pasture this spring will pay returns this season and continue to pay for about four more years.

A ten-year test by the Ohio agricultural experiment station shows a loss of one bushel of corn per acre for each day of delay in planting corn after May 15.

John Gresham's Girl

By CONCORDIA MERREL

(Copyright) WNU Service

THE STORY

By chance James Lee meets Lucy Gresham, daughter of Sir John Gresham, wealthy ship builder. Lee, unjustly accused of robbing the Gresham firm, was sent to prison. He blames Oliver Ames, Lucy's cousin, and Gresham's manager, and seeks revenge. Lee inherits wealth, and, in compliance with the will, changes his name from Warrington. He secures an invitation to the girl's birthday party. Lucy is practically engaged to Ames. She meets Lee, who makes love to her, planning thereby to hurt Gresham and Ames.

CHAPTER III

Lucy Is Won

She was crossing the wide landing at the top of the first flight when, to her utter surprise, Jocelyn Upton called to her from the depths of a wide window seat.

"Why, hullo, Jocelyn, what are you doing here, all alone?" she said.

"I'm doctored for repairs," answered Jocelyn, her voice oddly curt.

"Has your dress got torn?" asked Lucy, with a little laugh.

"No, my heart has." There was no laugh in Jocelyn's voice. But Lucy didn't take it very seriously. Jocelyn always seemed rather inclined to do and say things for effect.

"What can I offer you for that?" she said lightly.

Jocelyn rose suddenly and came, in her lithe, willowy way, to Lucy. Her eyes were flashing angrily.

"Oh, you can laugh!" she said, in a low, tense voice. "It's nothing to you, is it?"

Lucy moved back a step, the smile gone from her lips.

"Jocelyn, I don't understand. What have I done? Aren't you having a good time?"

"A good time!" echoed Jocelyn bitterly.

Lucy still couldn't altogether get rid of the idea that she was playing-acting.

"I'm awfully sorry. . . . Is there anything I can do?" she asked.

"Oh, no; there's nothing you can do. . . . Whatever can be done, I've got to do myself. . . . You've got this dance with Jim, haven't you?" she finished abruptly.

"Yes," answered Lucy.

"I know, I heard. . . . saw, too. I was looking over the banisters just now while he was talking to you. You've made a bit of a conquest, haven't you?"

Lucy colored like a poppy. "How absurd! Jocelyn, won't you come down and dance?"

Jocelyn ignored that. She turned and went back to the window.

Lucy waited a moment, then went up to her room and found the wrap she wanted. When she came down again Jocelyn was still there in the window seat.

"Going to dance in the garden?" she asked, eyeing the cloak, her thin lips curling.

"Yes," answered Lucy frankly.

"Oh, don't lie! It's so feeble!" "Jocelyn!"

"Don't I know that Jim can't dance? Can't dance for little apples. You're going to sit out in the moonlight. . . . You're making this latest affair of yours a trifle conspicuous, aren't you? Every one's rather amused. . . . But then, some of us know what Jim happens to be where women are concerned."

Lucy did not answer that; she was a little afraid of what she might say. Jocelyn's insinuation did not cut a very deep mark upon her, because whatever that notion man who had suddenly become so important to her might be, there was one thing he did not remotely suggest, and that was a philanderer. On the other hand, the insinuation did not leave her quite unmarked; perhaps this sort of insinuation never can. She was destined to remember it more than once, later on, but now refused to carry the rather poisonous conversation any further. Instead she did what she could to induce Jocelyn to come down and dance, but Jocelyn shrugged her thin shoulders and in a decidedly acid voice, begged Lucy not to keep Jim waiting.

Lucy, a good deal perplexed, went on her way downstairs, wondering what it was all about. Did Jocelyn care for Lee? Remembering back to an incident at the beginning of supper, she thought that it rather looked that way. But Jocelyn was always so theatrical; so prone to exaggerate her own feelings; so very apt to pose for effect; besides, Lucy remembered her being in love so many times before.

She was in the doorway, now, looking out onto the veranda, and there, in the light of the many-colored lanterns, Lee was waiting for her, and all thought of Jocelyn faded as he caught her hand and drew it through his arm.

"Let's go down into the garden," he suggested, and she agreed. They went down the path, crossed the grass and he released her as they sat down on a seat beneath a tree.

"How much time are you going to give me?" he asked.

"The length of a dance, anyway," she replied.

"Then I've no time to lose. I want you to tell me something. I want you to tell me exactly what you feel for your cousin—Mr. Ames."

"Oh. . . ." she said, startled.

"He loves you, doesn't he?" he went on.

"I. . . . I'm afraid he does," she admitted.

"Because," she said, looking up at him, "I. . . . don't love him."

"You don't want to love him, do you?"

"I hate to make him unhappy," she cried, her lips quivering. "He's like a brother to me. I've known him ever since I can remember. But I'm not fond of him in the right way. And I never knew it till tonight. And I'm afraid I've rather. . . . let him think."

"That you were fond of him the right way?" he put in.

She nodded.

"It's so awfully puzzling when you aren't sure," she said in a low voice.

"But tonight it suddenly came to me that I. . . ." She stopped and there was a moment's silence. "You see, she finished on a quickly caught breath. His hands came slowly towards her, caught her slender shoulders, and held her for a moment with a burning, steady gaze.

"A moment's pause as the look between them held; then he raised his head and his short, unlaughing laugh, ragged and odd now, with the triumph of his conquest, rose into the summer night sky.

She had made it easy! And he was not going to forego one smallest element of his victory. He sought her into his loveless arms, and crushed her quivering, yielding lips beneath his own.

He let her go, presently, rose abruptly, and took a few striding turns across the little lawn. He had drunk deep of the heady cup of victory and needed a moment to steady himself.

So far, he had won all along the line; but his plans were as yet really only set in train. They were far from being accomplished. He must not say, must not do, one single thing to jeopardize this. Still, he might allow himself the luxury of taking all that this first moment of triumph could give.

As abruptly as he had left her, he now came back and sat beside her again. He did not kiss her, nor take her into his arms. He wanted the satisfaction that words could give him and demanded it with quiet intensity.

"You love me?" The question came through tight lips. "Say it. Say the very words. Tell me. . . ."

He insisted in the same curious, tense way. There was something fiercely masterful in his voice and manner.

"I love you," she whispered. "Do you need assurance of that?"

"Tell me that you're mine. . . . Take you from. . . ."

He stopped to draw a sharp breath. "From all the rest of the world of men," he finished, with a queer laugh.

Something in the demand brought back to her memory the hateful suggestion that Jocelyn had made about him. There was so much in his manner that seemed the sheer desire for conquest.

She put out swift little hands, caught his big shoulders, and turned his face so that the moonlight shined on it plainly.

"Are you mine?" she countered softly.

The question took him aback. His dark eyes looked down into hers. His hands clenched tight. At the back of his brain a warning was sounding, telling him not to let his victory sweep him off his feet.

"Do you need assurance of that?" There was a tremor in his voice brought there by the guard he was setting on himself.

said, letting the words fall, slow and distinct. . . . "I've thought that you were going to marry me."

It was said. For a moment he almost held his breath, waiting for her answer. It meant so much to him; to that passion of revenge that the last three and a half years had cut deep into his heart.

For a moment she sat stone still. She was certain now; all her bewilderment at his abruptness vanished. He had been right; he loved her; he had been telling her so, in his own queer way, ever since their eyes first met. He loved her! The music of the three words rang like a song in her heart. . . . She looked up at him; away into the shadows, and up again.

"Can you want to marry me. . . . so soon?" she asked, her voice scarcely audible.

"I want it more than anything on earth," he answered her. "More than I've ever wanted anything. . . ."

She thought it was love that brought the feeling to his voice, and, with all her heart in the words: "Then. . . ."

Her voice very low and still. "I want it, too. . . . It's some sort of miracle. . . . Isn't it?"

It swept all thought of Jocelyn from her mind, and brought her face near to his own.

"I am yours entirely," she said tenderly. "Yours for. . . . always. Why should you ask?"

His arms went round her quickly. "Just to hear you say it. . . . Just to hear you say it!" he answered her.

When later they were going back toward the house, he said:

"Go and dance again. I'm going to find your father."

"To. . . . tell him?" she asked.

"Yes. To tell him," he replied.

They went up onto the veranda and parted at the long glass doors.

Lee's method of breaking the news to Lucy's father was characteristic. He found Sir John hovering around on the outskirts of the gaiety, stood squarely before him and said:

"I want to marry your girl, sir. Will you take me somewhere quiet, where we can talk it over?"

An interview followed in the library, where Lee, earlier in the evening, had found Lucy hiding, or rather, as Sir John was fond of saying afterward, it was less an interview, than a holdup, with Lee as the highwayman; himself the victim; and Lucy, the prize.

The highwayman won and went presently to find Lucy to tell her that her father wanted to see her.

"Is it all right?" she asked, looking up a shade anxiously into Lee's face.

"Do you think I'd let it be anything else?" he answered. She laughed happily, but her little hand into his big one and gave it a shy little squeeze as she went by him, on her way to her father.

It was a radiant-eyed Lucy who came to Sir John a few minutes later, and put her arms tight round his neck, whispering rapturously:

"Oh, daddy, I think I'm the happiest, luckiest girl in the whole wide world. I couldn't help it about Oliver, daddy. I tried and tried to think and decide, but this just happened. . . . all in a moment. . . . Out of nothing. . . . I didn't have to think. . . . I just knew. . . . Just like you knew about mother, darling. . . ."

He held her close and fondly and there was a quiver in the humor of his tone as he said after a long moment:

"Yes, sweetheart, I'm not accusing you of holding the family speed record."

They laughed together, a touch shakily.

It was getting along toward dawn, when the festive festivities ended, and most of the guests had faded homeward.

Lee was standing close before Lucy in the deserted ballroom, saying:

"Tomorrow we'll go together, and get a ring; a large one, so that every one will see at first sight that. . . . you're mine."

She looked up at him, laughing softly. "I think I'd like a little one better," she said, "so that just you and I will know."

That brought the warning beating into his brain again. The warning not to let the spirit of revenge that filled him, speak with too loud a voice. He recognized her words as the words of love. He came out of his thoughts, covering what he had said, with this excuse, made smilingly:

"I'm proud enough of my conquest to want people to know about it; but it shall be a small ring if you like."

He paused a moment, then held out his hand to show her a modest seal ring on his little finger. "Would you like it to be this one?" For the life of him, he couldn't say it smoothly. The fanning down of that great burning spirit of vengeance that was consuming him, in order to make it speak the gentle language of love, was not done easily.

IMPROVED UNIFORM INTERNATIONAL SUNDAY SCHOOL Lesson

Lesson for April 24

ABRAM'S GENEROSITY TO LOT

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 13:5-15.

GOLDEN TEXT—Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; in honour preferring one another.

PRIMARY TOPIC—A Generous Uncle. JUNIOR TOPIC—Abram Divides With His Nephew.

INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—An Adventure in Friendship. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—Too Generous to Quarrel.

Apparently a famine was sent upon Canaan soon after Abram entered it. Because of this famine, he went into Egypt. Doubtless the famine was sent because of the wickedness of the Canaanites, but it was so timed as to develop the graces of Abram's heart.

He needed to be taught the fact of his own weakness in order to fully realize God's power and faithfulness. It would have been far better for him to have remained in Canaan with his famine, knowing that he was where the Lord had led him, than to go into Egypt.

1. Abram and Lot Go Out of Egypt (vv. 1-4).

1. Thrust out by Pharaoh (v. 1 cf. 12:18, 19). By prevarication Abram deceived the king concerning the relation of Sarai to himself, but when the truth was known that she was his wife instead of his sister, Pharaoh thrust him out. This is not the last time that a child of God was rebuked and thrust out by a man of the world.

2. His wealth greatly increased (v. 2). Although Abram was away from the place to which God had called him, his temporal possessions increased. Increase in riches is no sign that a man is in fellowship with God.

3. He went back to Bethel (vv. 3, 4). Although he had declined from so white a way of life and had suffered shame and humiliation before a heathen king, when thrust out he had the good sense to go into the place of the altar, where his tent had been at the beginning. It was here that he called upon the name of the Lord.

There is no record of his having done so while in Egypt. His Egyptian experience cost him much spiritually, though he became rich there. He seems even to have lost his influence over Lot.

11. Abram and Lot Separate (vv. 5-13).

1. Strife between their herdmen (vv. 5-7). The goods of both Abram and Lot greatly increased. This increase in goods threatened strife between Abram and Lot. When they attempted to settle down, trouble arose between their herdmen. This is the first record of relatives quarrelling over financial matters. Riches often interfere with friendship. They engender greed and selfishness in men, and kindle jealousy and strife between them. For the chosen of God thus to quarrel is utterly folly, and criminal, especially when the enemies of the Lord's people look on.

2. Abram's magnanimous behavior (vv. 8, 9). He made to Lot a generous proposition which relieved the disagreeable situation. Lot was allowed his choice. Though he owed everything to Abram, he was allowed to choose that which suited him best. Abram's behavior in this case is a fine example of the art of living together peacefully.

3. Lot's selfish choice (vv. 10-13). His selfish heart prompted him to grasp for the best. His action shows that his stay in Egypt was ruinous to him. One cannot go into Egypt without being affected by it. This was a fatal choice for Lot. Though he for a while prospered and even was elevated to high official position, it was an expensive undertaking for him.

111. Abram Delivers Lot (14:11-16).

Lot, with all his goods, was taken away when the confederate kings came against Sodom. Though Lot's trouble was the result of his selfish choice, Abram's magnanimity of soul expressed itself by taking up arms to deliver him from the oppressor.

Lot is an example of one saved so as by fire (1 Cor. 3:11-15). He is an example of the man who allows the world to get the better of him. He set his affections upon earthly things, and the time came when he had to separate from them. The world and its lusts pass away, but he that doeth the will of God abideth forever (1 John 2:15-17). Once his money and his family were in Sodom, he endured its wickedness while longing to escape from it (11 Pet. 2:8).

In contrast with Lot who suffered from his evil choice Abram was greatly prospered. He grew rich in temporal things while at the same time he was rich toward God. Abram's whole life shows that those who make obedience to God first get the needed worldly things (1 Kings 3:5-13; Matt. 6:33).

Health and Happiness via Home Garden Route

Preparation of Garden Soil

By T. E. MYERS, County Agricultural Agent
of DeKALB COUNTY

Good seed is the first essential but just as important, if your garden is to be full of real vegetables, is the soil. Of course, we can't all start with rich loose garden soil, but we can remake it by the liberal application of manure and commercial fertilizer.

Half of the success of your garden depends upon the liberal application of manure and thorough preparation of the seed bed. Plow your garden just as soon as it is dry enough to work but not before that time. Usually when soil pressed in hand will easily crumble apart again, it is in condition to work. When it can be made into a hard ball it is too wet.

The soil must be plowed or spaded 8 to 10 inches deep, taking care to turn under any refuse or manure. Usually it is advisable if spading, to break up the clods as you go. The soil in any case must be pulverized so that it is free from clods and loose the entire depth that it has been broken.

Careful preparation of the soil will give the young vegetable seedlings a better chance to develop and thus make for a real garden.

"When a carpenter makes a mistake, its just what he expected."
"When a doctor makes a mistake, he buries it."

"When a judge makes a mistake, it becomes the law of the land."
"When a preacher makes a mistake, nobody knows the difference."

"But when the editor makes a mistake—good night!"

This last being interpreted, means that when the editor makes a mistake he does it with malice aforethought, with diabolical intent, with the person who happens to take offense especially in mind as he perpetrates the horrible deed. The editor's mistakes as they heap upon him finally crush him into oblivion and he passes out into nothingness.

Visits of Death Angel

Most Frequent at Night

The question of the time of day at which most deaths occur has engaged the attention of the French scientist, Lavastine, we are told in the Neues Wiener Journal (Vienna), reported by the Literary Digest. We read:

"On the strength of carefully collected statistical material Lavastine has come to the conclusion that the predominant majority of deaths occur at night."
"Most people die during the time of sleep, between seven o'clock in the evening and six o'clock in the morning. More rarely death occurs in the hours which man usually spends awake. Thus Lavastine observed last year that in the hospital under his direction about 120 patients died at night, whereas according to the records only 68 deaths occurred in the daytime."

"It is interesting that the French scientist, although he expressly emphasizes his rejection of astrology, traces this back to cosmic influences, still unknown to us."

"Moreover, he has also concerned himself with the problem of the hour of birth, and has collected extensive material from the memoranda of Parisian hospitals for women. Here, too, it may be drawn from statistics that the number of births in nighttime is much larger than by day."

Bridge's Central Span

"Frozen" Into Position

It is perhaps not a generally known fact, but the following incident actually happened, says the Washington Star. A certain bridge was under construction and when the central span was lifted into place it was found to be slightly too long to fit into the supporting spans. The engineer in charge purchased an enormous quantity of ice, and packing it around the steel members, caused contraction of the steel, eventually shrinking the entire structure and allowing the central span to slip into its proper position.

The fact that the bridge was too long resulted merely from a day of unseasonably high temperature, which happened to correspond with the day on which the last member of the bridge had to be placed. The simplest solution would have been to delay closing the bridge until the temperature dropped, or perhaps inserting the member at night. The fact that the engineer thought of packing the cantilevered arms of the bridge with ice indicates clearly what a resourceful engineer he was. The bridge is the Eads bridge across the Mississippi river at St. Louis, and the engineer's name was James B. Eads.

Huns Fierce Fighters

The Huns have a recorded history much more ancient than the time of Attila, and they endured long after, finally being merged with other races to found modern Hungary. They had many battles in China under Me-Te, Tchitchi and other great leaders against whom China built the Great Wall. Driven off from their ancient home in Mongolia, they wandered east and won success against Rome under Balamir. Then came the period of Attila. Following his death the Huns declined for a time, but later disguised themselves as Avars and developed other great leaders. Balamir and the Khas-Khan, Charlemagne defeated them and re-taged their territory, but the Huns had another metamorphosis under Arpad.

Brief health hints for business man:

When you awake each morning arise immediately.

Devote ten minutes to exercising with the window open.

Take a cool tub or shower bath, or rub-down.

If possible, take a short walk before breakfast.

Include fresh or stewed fruit in your morning meal.

Take your time eating breakfast.

Always drink a glass of cold milk with the meal.

Avoid reading when eating breakfast.

Start in time for your train or office.

Cultivate a cheerful spirit every morning.

We suggest the following for the farmer:

Arise before you are entirely awake.

Devote ten minutes or more in carrying out the ashes and building fires.

Be sure to exercise briskly in feeding the stock and milking five or six cows before breakfast.

Include anything you can't sell in your morning meal.

Avoid reading grain and egg market reports while eating breakfast.

Drink a quart of milk with your meal even though you could sell it for 2 cents.

Take your time eating breakfast even if the pig is fast in the fence.

Start to the field by six to avoid hurrying.

Cultivate a cheerful spirit, regardless of the fact that it is about tax paying time.

PHYSICAL WELFARE IN THE SCOUT PROGRAM

Do you know that physical well-being is the foundation upon which character and success are largely built? The scout program for the next two months is largely to be a program of physical development for the boys.

The scout program makes a well balanced physical life a basic objective—a thing to be attained and maintained.

The Army Draft revealed clearly the results of neglect of physical welfare by the country at large. The following table shows the results of the physical examination of 4,208,446 national army registrants. Only 70.41% of those examined were accepted. 20.62% were rejected and 8.97% could be used for limited service.

Nearly one-third of those called by the draft were found to be physically unfit for the exacting physical demands of full army service. Of those accepted thousands demanded special care and selected service. And yet the common good demands that the

BETTER HOMES WEEK

Better Homes Week has become one of the recognized institutions of America. Its purpose is to attract attention to the problem of improving our homes both materially and spiritually.

The local chairman for 1932 is Mrs. Auber Butler, who has selected a committee to assist in various departments. Among other features of the week there will be an exhibit at the Spencerville School. The displays will include many varieties of shrubbery for beautifying home surroundings as well as suggestions for interior improvements.

Also on some evening of next week, to be announced later, there will be a program at the Spencerville School at which it is hoped there will be an authority on home beautification. At any rate there will be a good program so watch for the date.

Following is the honor roll for the first six weeks period of the second semester:

- Seniors, none.
- Juniors, none.
- Sophomores, none.
- Freshmen, Madonna Kelley.
- Eighth Grade, Richard Kimes.
- Warren Rectenwall, E. L. Saur.
- Fred Steward, Margaret Walter.
- Seventh Grade, Wm. D. Erick.
- Alice Hart.

The honor roll for the second six weeks period of the second semester is as follows:

- Seniors, Glenn L. Brace.
- Juniors, Loyd Laux.
- Sophomores, none.
- Freshmen, Madonna Kelley.
- Edith Wade.
- Eighth Grade, Alice Baker, Lee Chapman, Fred Steward.
- Seventh Grade, Wm. D. Erick.
- Dallas Zimmerman.

The last period of the school year started off with vim on Monday morning, April 11. Nearly every one was present and before the week was out quite a deal of interest in base ball had been generated. On Wednesday evening the high school team played the team from LaOtto. The visiting team carried away the victory. On Friday afternoon the junior high team went to Leo for a losing game with their junior high team.

Friday is the last day for the grades. Hooray, kids! how long some it will be when you are gone!

Spring comes apace.

There are rumors of a field day on Friday, April 22. At this writing we do not know the exact decision on the rumors, however.

The seniors are hard at work on their play "Danger at the Crossroads" to be given on Saturday night, April 30, in the community hall. Some of them have already begun serious thinking on their essays and orations for their commencement program also.

The commencement will be held on the evening of May 17, in the Lutheran Church, the members of the class being responsible for the evening's program.

The Kitchen Cabinet

SUITABLE FOODS

Some day when there is a bit of cold meat, such as chicken, ham, or, in fact, any good well-seasoned meat, put it through the food chopper and use as filling for the following dish:

Stuffed Onions.—Take six large onions, peel and remove enough of the center to form a cavity to hold the following mixture: One tablespoonful of minced green pepper, one-half cupful of meat, one tablespoonful of butter, paprika and salt to taste, with the centers of the onion finely minced. Stuff with this mixture and place in gem pans with a little hot water in each, bake while cooking with cream or butter and water and serve with a rich butter sauce poured over the onions. Sausage makes a fine stuffing for the above.

Honey Ice Cream.—Blend one tablespoonful of cornstarch with one-quarter of a cupful of cold milk, add two and three-fourths cupfuls of scalded milk and cook until smooth and thickened; cook in a double boiler 15 minutes. Mix two beaten eggs, one cupful of honey and one teaspoonful of salt, add gradually to the hot mixture. Cool and freeze as usual.

Mineral Oil Mayonnaise.—Here is a recipe for the overweight person: Mix one teaspoonful of mustard, one-half teaspoonful of salt, small pinch of pepper, and paprika and one egg yolk. Beat in slowly drop by drop one cupful of mineral oil, adding a little vinegar occasionally until two tablespoonfuls are added. Keep in a cool place.

Molded Chicken Salad.—Soak two tablespoonfuls of gelatin in one-half cupful of cold chicken stock, heat one and one-half cupfuls of stock and add the gelatin to it, add one-half a teaspoonful of salt, cool, and when nearly set fold in two and one-half cupfuls of diced cooked chicken, one-fourth cupful of chopped green pepper, three-fourths of a cupful of dried celery, one-half cupful each of mayonnaise and cream, whipped. Turn into a mold and serve with whipped cream and mayonnaise.

How It Started

By Jean Newton

Quizotic
For this perfectly good English word there is explanation in no study of etymology that ever was on land or sea. No method of prefix, suffix, root explanation will serve here.

For the word comes to us from a literary character whose name was the title of the work in which he is immortal—Cervantes' "Don Quixote." In this chivalrous romance in which, according to some opinions, Cervantes wished to burlesque the old Spanish knight-errantry, the author presents a lovable character, Don Quixote, courteous to all, gallant, generous, child-like in his extravagant romanticism. In other words, he was anything but practical.

Although it is over 300 years since Don Quixote took printed form—his name is pronounced Key-o-tay—we have anglicized him, and to this day when we want to describe something as foolishly impractical we call it Quizotic.

French May Use Skis in Sahara Sand Hills

Algiers.—It is no longer necessary to risk pneumonia to enjoy the sport of skiing. For General Deschamps has announced here that there is perfect skiing in the heart of the Sahara, where the sun always shines and there is no danger of wet feet. Sand replaces snow for the sport.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

by WALTER TRUMBULL

There is a wealthy widower in New York, one of whose daughters lives with him in his rather elaborate home. He is a man of quick temper and strong will who, when he is crossed or if anything occurs which is not to his liking, roars like a couple of lions. Invariably, he eats one egg for breakfast, and has done so for years, but for some reason he likes to see more than one egg on the platter. Perhaps he likes to make a selection. I don't know. At any rate, his cook apparently got tired of seeing the other eggs returned and one morning sent up a platter with a single egg on it.

The head of the house took one look at it and then began to roar in his best manner. He demanded to know why in the blue blazes he was served with a single egg. His butler, an old retainer, told him frankly that he had not in the memory of the oldest inhabitant eaten more than one egg and that the cook undoubtedly had conceived on cooking that one in the best possible manner. The man roared that he would have things cooked and served in his own house as he got dinged pleased and said to the butler: "You go out there and tell that fat, addle-pated excuse for a cook to poach eggs and keep on poaching eggs, until I send her word to stop."

The butler delivered the message, the man ate his egg, and then departed hastily for his car, waiting to take him to his office.

Pretty soon his daughter appeared for breakfast. Practically covering the table were platters of eggs. She asked what it meant and the butler explained. She asked how many eggs the cook had poached and the butler said he thought the count had reached about three dozen, and that supplies were running low. The daughter, who was not in the slightest afraid of her father, for all his roaring, smiled a wicked smile.

"Send out for more eggs," she said. "and tell the cook to keep right on following orders."

About an hour later she telephoned her father.

"Don't you," she said, "think it's to neighbors he had put the $3,000 in bills right in his trouser pocket, where it would stay. Then two men carrying revolvers came into his room.

"Give us those $3,000 bills you've got in your pocket," they said. Grakos obeyed.

about time to tell her to stop?" "What in blue blazes are you talking about?" demanded the head of the house. "I'm busy."

"Oh, all right," said his daughter.

You gave the order, so of course I don't want to interfere. There are ten dozen poached eggs here waiting for you now, but you know your own capacity."

And she hung up the receiver.

LURE OF NORTH CALLS YOUTH

Explorers Tell of Riches in Great Bear Country.

Vancouver, B. C.—Almost due west of Stewart which nestles among the mountains at the end of the appendix-like Portland canal that separates Alaska from British Columbia lies the valley of the Ingenika. Immediately south is the country drained by the Omineca. All this area is some 580 miles from Vancouver as the crow flies. And from this district to 500 miles further north where the Great Bear country sprawls about Great Bear lake is the most highly mineralized section in the whole world. It is upon this immensely rich northern district that the eyes of young Vancouver are just now turned.

For like Nordic St. Johns, crying out in a wilderness of degenerate softness, certain explorers have been wintering in Vancouver, preaching the gospel of pioneering and unfolding marvelous tales of the unrivaled wealth of the North. The result has been a wave of "north consciousness" throughout all British Columbia.

This North country, says these explorers, has been libeled and abused, just as all northerly areas have been since the beginning of time.

It is true that the North has long, cold winters, but its summers, three months of almost continuous sunshine, makes practically hothouse conditions for productive effort. Moreover the cold of the North is dry. Twenty below zero in dry cold is more tolerable than twenty above zero in the damp atmosphere of the Atlantic and Pacific coasts. But these are little things that can be overcome by the aid of science and the application of the pioneer spirit.

The point is that the Canadian North, northern British Columbia to the Northwest Territories, holds more mineral wealth than North America has yet produced. There is gold in the Ominecas that will materially enrich the world's supply. There is silver in the Ingenikas occurring in solid, almost pure blocks. In the Peace river country there is anthracite and wheat production enough for ten Americas.

In the Great Bear country there has been blocked out by hand $25,000,000 worth of pitchblende containing radium. Twenty tons of this ore was brought down in 1931 and it assayed as high as $5,000 a ton. The extent of the total deposit cannot even be guessed.

These are the tales, borne out by authentic facts and indisputable proofs, that these explorers are pouring into the ears of languorous Canadian youths whose romance has hitherto been derived from a synthetic ticking of the nerves with base adventures in stocks and bonds. So now, everywhere in the West, young men are throwing off bond consciousness to assume North consciousness.

Big Subterranean Water Supply Under Nebraska

Lincoln, Neb.—Nebraska has enough underground water in the south central part of the state to form a lake twice as large and twice as deep as the Great Salt Lake of Utah.

This is the estimate of Dr. A. G. Lugo, geologist of the University of Nebraska, who has made a survey. The water is held in formation of sand and gravel made during the glacial periods, according to the geologist.

Nebraska is traversed by the Platte river from one end to the other. The waters from the Platte seep away underground, he said, to the rivers along the southern border of the state. This accounts for the dryness of the Platte during the summer months.

TRAP FISH WITH LIGHT

Electric Bulb Expected to Lure Rare Specimens.

San Francisco, Calif.—An electric light 3,000 feet below the surface of the Pacific ocean is rare enough, San Francisco scientists believe, to capitalize placatorial curiosity and yield some equally rare marine specimens.

A recently developed device is going to be used by scientists aboard the Templeton Crocker yacht, Zaca, in a six months expedition to the Galapagos, Tres Marias and other island groups off the west coast of Mexico. It is a lighted bulb that can be lowered to a maximum depth of more than half a mile in the water.

The light globe is in the center of a lattice-like box. Curious fish and crustaceans can get through the openings to investigate the light, but they can't get out.

Fish that live too far under water to take an interest in a brilliantly-lit fly are considered an inquisitive lot by Dr. Barton W. Everman of the California Academy of Sciences.

The light, Doctor Everman believes, will attract rather than repel all free swimming things, including microscopic sea life. He expects the Zaca to return next fall with thousands of new species of underwater life in preservatives, as well as many alive in specially constructed tanks.

The expedition will also devote some time to gathering of insects, birds and mammals native to the seldom visited islands in tropical waters.

MAY LIVE IN JUNGLE

Col. P. H. Fawcett, famous British explorer who disappeared into the trackless wilds of the Brazilian jungles seven years ago, may still be alive. The British consul general at Sao Paulo has announced a most definite clue as to the whereabouts of Fawcett and his son John, who accompanied him on the trip in 1925. Stephen Hattin, a jungle trapper, told the consul that he conversed with a man who claimed to be Fawcett, at an Indian encampment approximately six weeks' journey from Sao Paulo.

Lloyd George Tries His Hand at Psalm Writing

London.—Solicitor, world-famous politician and statesman, journalist, and now psalm writer.

Such is the versatile record of Lloyd George, British war-time premier. During his recent stay in Criccieth, Wales, the veteran Liberal leader translated six verses of the psalm "Thy Kingdom Come, O God" into Welsh.

The psalm is a beautiful metrical version and will be sung at the Psalmody festival of the Welsh churches and the Eisteddfodau.

Turkey and Persia Make English Legal Tongue

London.—The governments of Turkey and Persia have decided to adopt English as the language for their official communication. French, which has been the language of diplomacy in the east for centuries, is to be replaced.

The Turkish government is now canvassing England for celebrated English orientologists who are needed as teachers. Altogether, from 8,000 to 3,500 professors and instructors are wanted from Great Britain and the United States.

The two countries entered into discussions on the plan following the breakdown of Hiss Khan's efforts to introduce the Roman alphabet in Persia two years ago. English will henceforth be taught in the schools of both countries. It is even said that the Koran will be translated and read only in English in Turkish schools.

Bow, Wow! Meaning 'Here I Am, Dentist!'

Louisburg, N. C.—Jack, Dr. A. H. Fleming's pet bulldog, knows when he needs a dentist. Doctor Fleming put a gold crown on one of Jack's teeth. One day the dog trotted restlessly into the office. When a patient left, Jack jumped into the dentist's chair and opened his mouth. The dog had lost the gold crown.

When the Bank Rate Was Reduced in London

This looks like a riot scene, but it only shows the excitement in London's financial district when it became known that the Bank of England had decided to reduce the discount rate to 4 per cent. The high-hatted bank messengers, some with special guards, are rushing forth to spread the glad news.

CAP AND BELLS

A NECESSITY

Two men, who were but mere acquaintances, were discussing a lecture.

"Are you going to attend?" asked one.

"Oh, yes," was the reply.

"I'm not; it's bound to be most boring. I'm sure."

"I'm sorry you think that way, but I must attend. You see, I'm the lecturer."—Pearson's.

NO OTHER WAY

"Why didn't the chief of police investigate the matter before?"

"How should you expect him to know anything until he sees it in the papers?"

Like and Unlike

They were standing before a large painting entitled "Echo" in an art museum.

"I suppose," said one man, "it is appropriate to depict Echo as a woman, because she always has the last word."

"On the other hand," returned the second man, "an echo speaks only when spoken to."—Los Angeles Times.

Forenight

"I suppose you attribute your great success in life to your own foresight," said the magazine biographer.

"Yes," answered Mr. Dustin Stax.

"In what way did it manifest itself?"

"In picking out smart lawyers to look after my affairs."

They Freeze

"Yes, isn't it strange that when people get frozen they rub their limbs with snow until circulation is restored?"

Benevolent Old Lady.—But what do they do with the poor people in summer?

An Example

"I say, old chap, what's the difference between 'abstract' and 'concrete'?"

"Well, when my wife promises to make a cake, that's abstract; when she makes one it's concrete."

MAY RESCUE HIM

Her—Yes, I've thrown Tom overboard.

Him—Then it is all over forever?

Specialists in Veracity

"I like people who speak the truth," "So do I," replied Miss Cayenne; "although, I confess I am annoyed by those who can't recognize it unless it's something disagreeable."

HEADACHE

THE woman who lets headaches upset her plans must have her eyes and ears closed to certain facts about aspirin. There is always swift comfort, and never any harm, in genuine aspirin tablets that bear the Bayer cross. Doctors have said so; men and women everywhere have found it so. Any headache—from any cause—is always relieved by one or two tablets. And lots of other aches and pains. Neuralgia. Neuritis. Rheumatism. Nagging pains. The pain from colds which make you "ache all over." Sore throat. Systemic or "muscular" pain. Bayer Aspirin can spare you lots of needless suffering! Just be sure you get the genuine.

Famous English Hotel One of World's Oldest

"Ye Olde Griffin hotel," at March, Cambridgeshire, England, one of the best known hotels in the eastern counties, dating back to 1090, has been sold. It was a noted house in old coaching days, and the coaches at times drove through the space where the front doors are now into the courtyard at the back. An offer of $5,000 has been made and refused for the remarkable panelling in the commercial room.

The walls of the hall are of Indian carved teak, and all the ceilings are supported by the original massive oak beams, while the ancient card room is still in existence. The bath is of real Italian marble, hewn out of the solid stone, and was originally used by the Italian monks, and subsequently brought to England. The hotel has been the subject of articles by Charles Dickens, G. K. Chesterton, H. G. Wells, and others, and is visited by many distinguished people during the season.—Detroit News.

Texas Preserves Relic
The oldest complete structure still remaining in Texas is the stone fort at San Pedro Springs, San Antonio. Plans to preserve it are well advanced. Its construction is placed at various dates between 1690 and 1716. The stone fort formed the southwest corner of a cedar stockade, burned by Indians. Defense of the old fort from attacks of decay has been spurred on by recent loss of the old stone market house and the Veramendi palace. Both these old buildings gave way to the march of industry. The fort is on ground made a park by the city, so is free from danger of razing.

HOGG ADDRESS IN CONGRESS

bankers bought outright or panned off on the public $12,000,000,000 of foreign securities. Only those who heard the testimony as brought out by Senator Hiram Johnson in the Senate investigation committee, or who have read the hearings, can realize how reckless and irresponsible was action of the international bankers. It was the Son of Man who drove the money changers from the temple.

"The record shows that in many instances these loans were urged on foreign states to make improvements which were not needed. No other country except our own could have withstood the shock. No wonder, then, these international bankers want the foreign loans of the Government canceled that they may first collect their own."

"I have no quarrel with wealth, but I am opposed, as I think every good citizen should be opposed, to the vicious and dangerous methods which have too often been pursued by certain organizations of capital to squeeze from the American workingman and the American farmer unjust profits for their own greedy gratification. We can not sidestep these questions. They involve the physical and the moral well-being of 120,000,000 people. It is the business of government to deal with them and we must face the facts squarely."

The Supreme Question
"To attack the rich because they are rich and to assail capital because it is capital is one thing, but to insist that those who are in a position to influence the entire trend of social affairs that they shall operate in accordance with just means and honest principles is the supreme question before the American people to-day."

"The man of vast wealth is not in possession of it to deal with it as he chooses, regardless of benefit or welfare of society."

"The god of gold is enthroned on too many hilltops in America. Clean living, virtue, and excellence in achievements are far secondary in the minds of too many lovers of luxury. The individual is rapidly becoming the hired man of big corporations. The golden rule is becoming the "gold in" rule.

Function of Government

The first and primary function of our Government is to protect America and the American people from foreign aggression and to preserve and maintain justice and order at home. America is at peace with the world. Everyone knows that an adequate military and Navy defense is our cheapest, best, and necessary means of maintaining that peace.

"I do not mean to be critical of our Government. It is the best government in all history. It is my duty to point out the disastrous trends in it. Aside from maintaining peace with foreign nations, our Government is more efficient than official. To-day our Government is engaged in countless duplication of things which can and are being done by individuals and groups of individuals not in Government service."

The Government is giving vastly more attention to these secondary things than to the primary functions of government. The Government of the United States should not be engaged in any kind of business, study, investigation, or activity that is being substantially done or can be done by individuals or group of individuals not in the Government service. Our Government has gotten too far away from its real functions. Its feverish and expensive activities are too often neither useful or necessary. Educational, medical, scientific, engineering, and other research organizations have facilities and experience for investigation that the Government need not duplicate.

Life and Property Unsafe

Twelve witnesses in a Federal criminal case were recently assassinated and no one was punished therefor. Crime and criminals abound. The Government must withdraw from its officious activities and concentrate its attention on official duties. Business men grow weary opening questionnaires from the Department of Commerce while they must send an armed guard to protect their messenger boy when he goes around the corner to deposit a small sum of money.

Reduction Imperative

"With two exceptions, there is not a department in our National Government in which the activities could not be reduced by a large per cent and no harm whatever done to real governmental activities. There are many able men in Government service, but there are many experts who do not expert. The American people can not afford, and they do not want a $4,000,000,000 National Government."

The Government Printing Office is the model of efficiency. The Nation would get along just as well and I believe endure as long with one-third the printing that is done there. This is only an example. There are 80,000 employees in the executive departments throughout the Nation. I have repeatedly urged lessening of appropriations and have introduced many amendments to that effect. A radical curtailment of hundreds of millions must and will be effected before adjournment. All higher salaries must be reduced.

Stock-Exchange Tax

"There are 44 different stock exchanges in the United States. Taxes placed on their transactions by the House of Representatives will amount to $50,000,000 a year. The abuses of the market and of selling short are recognized everywhere. Too many transactions are by folks who are seeking profits they do not earn. Gambling is encouraged and individual industry discouraged."

No Sales Tax

"To meet the deficit certain interests proposed a sales tax. They proposed thereby that a man rearing his children and endeavoring to support his family as best he can should pay a tax on every dollar that the tax on million dollar a year incomes and inheritance taxes should be less. The sales tax was defeated. It was the most unjust tax that could affect the poor and needy. A sales tax could not reach hoarded millions."

Inheritance Tax

"I was one of those who advocated and voted for a 65 per cent inheritance tax on estates consisting of huge fortunes. It is the only method of safeguarding the future of the Republic. This inheritance tax on large estates is the most just and necessary tax. I will give a few of the large estates which have been left within the past two years: Thomas B. Slick, $75,000,000; Colonel Friedman, $50,000,000; Payne Whitney, $239,000,000; J. T. Dorrance, $220,000,000; William P. Foss, $30,000,000; Ella von E. Wendel, $100,000,000; George F. Baker, $75,000,000; R. W. Wanamaker, $42,000,000; W. M. Wright, $60,000,000; Samuel Hather, $50,000,000; Abraham Erlanger, $75,000,000; Edmond Bok, $24,000,000.

"In the American Economic Review of recent date it is shown that two groups of wealth at the present rate of increase will in 40 years own half of the United States."

"Under the law as enacted by the House the maximum, 65 per cent, begins at $10,000,000. That rate is not as high as the British rate. Strong influences are at work to weaken the national inheritance tax law. Unless there is a certain limit on the vast accumulation of wealth the future of our Nation is not safe."

Income Tax

"When a mother works at a factory long hours for $8 a week, and on this must support two or three children, it is difficult to understand the logic of those vast incomes which object to an income tax. They prefer a sales tax on what the mother buys with the $8. I voted to materially increase the tax on high incomes. Lincoln and Edison earned a million a year, but did not collect it. Many are the doctors, the teachers, the ministers, and the scientists who earn great sums. They do not collect it."

Tax-Exempt Bond Evil

"To escape the payment of any tax, great fortunes buy tax-exempt bonds. According to a recent estimate, there are to-day outstanding more than twenty-five billions of tax-exempt securities. Nearly one billion is being issued by States and their subdivisions each year."

"Tax-exempt bonds evade payment of taxes. They encourage the issue of the securities by States and subdivisions. They divert funds from the development of productive enterprises into nonproductive, wasteful, extravagant State and municipal expenditures. They are a safe haven for those who pay no tax."

"No principle of taxation is more generally accepted or more just than that taxes should be levied in accordance with ability to pay. There should be no privileged class under our Government. A special privilege is granted to those who hold tax-exempt securities. It furnishes a convenient and constitutional means to escape taxation and thereby causes a great loss of revenue. It is in effect a subsidy to certain individuals and interests. Many fortunes use it to escape their just part of the public burden. The weak should not be forced to bear the burden of the strong."

"I have placed on the House Clerk's desk a petition to discharge the Ways and Means Committee from the consideration of H. J. Res. 112 which I introduced, proposing a constitutional amendment to remedy the evil of tax-exempt securities."

exempt securities. It should have the immediate and favorable attention of Congress.

Reconstruction Corporation
"For some time it has been impossible for farmers, laborers, and business men to secure loans at banks which were members of the Federal reserve system. Regardless of the individual merit of the applicant, loans were not available. A national bank has many advantages given it by the Federal Government. Many of these banks even now are the biggest hoarders of money in America."

"Last summer so many complaints were made concerning the failure of the Federal reserve system to function that I wired President Hoover, as many doubtless did, and suggested an enlargement of rediscout privileges in order that the public might be accommodated. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation was set up by Congress and authorized to rediscout on good security. It is prohibited from taking foreign securities. It is a part of the United States Government and has an authorization of $2,000,000,000 capital for the service of American citizens."

National Banks

"To-day a bank can rediscout good loans with the Reconstruction Finance Corporation without delay if it chooses to do so. Last week a small bank in a town of 400 people in my district rediscouted $60,000 worth of notes for the farmers in that community."

"Contrary to what we usually see in advertisements, the First National Bank at Fremont, Ind., a town of 800 people, advertised in the county seat paper at Angola, The Steuben Republican, that it is in a position to rediscout paper in order to help agriculture and business. While many small banks are rendering this service, the vaults of many of the larger ones are overflowing with money, and few loans are available. These big banks have taken care of themselves and stopped there."

Interest Rates

"There is no justification for the high rates of interest which most people must pay on loans. Bank failures have occurred with increasing rapidity. A bank guarantee law must protect the depositor, and a lower rate of interest must prevail."

Dignity of Labor

"The greatest Man of all history worked at the carpenter's trade until He was 30 years old."

trade until He was 30 years old. At 33 He was put away by false leaders who cared more for self-gratification and power than for humanity. Who is there who can even calculate the value to the human race of the life of that Carpenter? No dignity excels the dignity of honest toil."

"A few years ago a man who accumulated vast millions while most of his employees lived in huts too vile for description, said that a man is worth a dollar a day from his shoulders down, but from his shoulders up he is worth as much as he can collect. In that he did not regard labor as human. Of course, he gave away large sums. It is easier to be generous than just."

"Labor knows better than anyone the misery and wretchedness which despotic corporations have in the past visited upon it. I am proud to have had a part in putting more humane provisions into the labor injunction law of America. Too long it had been denied the toiling masses of our land."

"No workingman wants that which does not belong to him. Too often he has run an uneven race with the powers of great wealth. After a life of toil and economy he should not be forced to turn to charity in his last days."

"Red Herring"

Dr. Charles Beard is America's outstanding living historian. He is learned and fearless. His books are understandable. Every thoughtful person should read his 800-page work on the Rise of American Civilization. It enables one to grasp more deeply the true proportion and significance of events. The student of economic affairs will then see the significance of Doctor Beard's statement that some issues before the American voter are "red herring to drive the American people off the real trail."

Economic Balance

"The foundation of social life is the home. The family is the basis of civilization. The test which I apply to all legislation is how its provisions will affect the welfare and the happiness of the American home. Unrestricted monopoly and concentrated wealth do not make for better homes. Watered stock and inflated salaries are a plague to America. If greed and selfishness in high places would for a season practice the teachings of the lowly Nazarene what a transformation there would be."

"An economic balance must be established and maintained. Currency must be stabilized and the circulating medium increased. Families must be helped to purchase homes. The independent business man must be protected. Buying power must be restored to the farmer and to labor. Immigration must be further restricted. A definitely higher value must be placed on human life and on human welfare." (Applause.)

A BENEFIT PLAY FOR NEXT MONTH

A group of young people of St. Joe will present a benefit play Friday evening, May 6, at the St. Joe Gymnasium under the auspices of the Concord Township Home Bureau. The play "A Poor Married Man," was recently given in Fort Wayne under the auspices of the American Legion and was a pronounced success. The young people of St. Joe are working hard at the play, and every indication points to it being given in a creditable manner, and the attending public is assured of an enjoyable evening's program.

In addition to the three-act play, the Punkin Center quartette and a group of tap dancers from Auburn, and Paul Dean of Spencer will furnish specialties between the acts. All talent on the program is being donated free to the Home Bureau, to benefit and further a worthy project undertaken by them last winter. Look for program and further announcements in The News next week.

SUNDAY SCHOOL FOLKS TO HEAR JUDGE CARLIN

Judge Clyde C. Carlin of Angola, judge of the Steuben-LaGrange circuit court, will deliver his great lecture, "Sunrise" at the spring meeting of the DeKalb Council of Religious Education next Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock, C. S. T., at the First M. E. Church.

"Sunrise" according to those who have heard it far surpasses Judge Carlin's lecture on "Indiana" which has been heard in so many parts of the state. At Indianapolis recently the lecture made a decided hit.

Workers in every Sunday School in DeKalb county ought to hear this great lecture which will prove especially attractive to young people. The public is invited.

The singing will be led by Ben H. Dirks, who is in Auburn at this time with the Simmons evangelistic party holding a revival series in the Methodist Church.

ST. JOE BOY MAKING INDIANA BASE BALL

Bloomington, Ind., April 27.—DuWayne Kinsey of St. Joe is one of 27 Indiana University freshmen now working out regularly on the Crimson yearling base ball squad under the direction of Coach Paul Harrell.

Kinsey is a survivor of the first cut which trimmed the squad of nearly 60 men to a workable size. The initial cut was made a few days after the first practice was called, but the remaining men are expected to be tried out for several weeks before a final paring of the squad.

The turnout for baseball at Indiana this year was the largest on record for some time and Indiana coaches insist that the team has some of the best material seen on an Indiana fresh nine in a number of years.

BIRTHDAY SURPRISE PARTY GIVEN SUNDAY

Honoring Miss Mary Kathryn Young on the occasion of her thirteenth birthday anniversary, a group of friends from the St. Joe School entertained with a surprise party Sunday afternoon, April 24, at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Arleigh M. Young of one-half mile north of Rehoboth. Games were played and refreshments were served. Those present were, Jean Ridgway, Louise Sechler, Mary Dressell, Erna Ridenbach, Clara Wiers and Ronald Borthwick.

Examiners Statement vs False Report

There has come to my attention, the fact that a story is being circulated in this county to the effect that the books and records of my office are not properly kept and that the accounts are not in balance. In reply to this statement, I wish to submit the following, taken from the report of the Treasurer's office made by the Field Examiners, for the period from January 1, 1931 to December 31, 1931:

SPECIAL REPORT

Balances at beginning of this period are the same as closing balances in last preceding report.
Records in use are correct forms and all are properly kept.
Deposits are made in conformity with requirements of the depository law.
All records are in balance at close of examination except as noted. (Overpayment on Diehl Drain, 39 cents.)
Merritt M. Maxwell has on file a surety bond in the penal sum of $50,000.

CERTIFICATE

We, the undersigned Field Examiners, submit the foregoing report of our examination of the aforesaid office, and hereby certify that same is true and correct to the best of our knowledge and belief.

C. A. HUTCHENS
C. F. LAUTZENHEISER

TO HAVE SOME NEW QUARTERS SOON

A quarter of a dollar with a new design will be placed in circulation by the treasury in three weeks or so.

Bearing the head of Washington, it will replace the one which has an eagle on one side and the figure of a woman on the other.

The purpose is to replace the old coin, which was of such design that it did not wear as long as experts believed it should. Because of the poor wearing quality of the old coin and faults in design, stories were widely circulated that quarters of a dollar in circulation which had no date on them were counterfeit. The report, however, was untrue and the fact that the coin minted up to two years ago had the date raised above the rim so that the numerals wore off quickly.

HOGG RADIO PROGRAMS

The friends of Congressman David Hogg scheduled several radio programs.

Judge Clyde Carlin, of Angola; Judge William Endicott, of Auburn; Judge Frank Gordon, of Bluffton; Attorney Fred Bodenhafer, of Kendallville; Mr. Hogg and others will be heard on programs beginning on standard time as follows:

Friday, 12:15 noon;
Saturday, 6:00 P. M.;
Monday, 6:00 P. M.

An additional schedule will be announced later.

VETERANS ORGANIZE

The ex-service men of the community met Tuesday evening and formed a Memorial Day Association to be called the "Veterans Memorial Association."

Abner Trostle was elected president; John Crothers, secretary and treasurer, and Ralph Sechler as grand marshal.

They would like to have all men or lodges and clubs that want to have a part in the services on Memorial Day to meet with them on Friday night, May 6.

Lights of New York

By WALTER TRUMBULL

Keepers of billiard halls in New York tell me that the depression has had a peculiar effect on their business. In the old days they got a lot of patronage from the heads of firms. Then business boomed to such an extent that the firm heads did not feel they had to be on the job all the time. They began to take afternoons off, instead of just going out for lunch and a game of billiards, and took themselves to golf courses. Trade came in such volume that they did not have to solicit it, and they felt their subordinates could handle the details. But, when the bubble burst, they were back at their desks. Many did not want to spend either the money or the time to play a game of billiards without taking a lot of time and, moreover, they can get back to their offices in a hurry on a telephone call.

Billiards is an old game. A Spaniard imported a billiard table to St. Augustine about the time of the first settlement there. I don't know when or where the first public billiards room was established, but it must have been long ago. At first, billiards was played with four balls, but in the course of time some men grew so expert that it was felt the game must be made more difficult. So they reduced the number of balls to three. That was all right until there came along a rather small man from the Middle West by the name of Jacob Schaefer.

The professional game, in those days, ended when one of the players had scored 1,000 points. In an exhibition match in California, Schaefer ran 1,000 points from spot. He did it again and again until it became evident that he could run 1,000 points any time he happened to be feeling well. An opponent who brought his pet cue to a match with Schaefer never got a chance to use it. So they had to make the game over. It was Jacob Schaefer who made them put balk lines on the table.

Miss Annie Smith Peck, the famous mountain climber, is eighty-one years old. She was born in Providence and was graduated from the University of Michigan in 1878. She remained there long enough to take a master's degree. Then she studied music in Germany, and Greek and archeology in Athens. She later taught mathematics in a school in Cincinnati, and Latin at Purdue and Smith. When she had nothing else to do, she climbed mountains, wrote books, and lectured. Miss Peck climbed the Matterhorn in 1895, and Popocatepetl and Orizaba in 1897. Apparently no mountain peak in South America or the Alps was too high for her. In 1898, she climbed to the top of Mt. Huascarán, in Peru, a mountain of 21,812 feet, the highest point attained by any American in the Americas. The Lima Geographical society named a mountain after her.

Knowledge and exercise appear to have kept Miss Peck active and well. Not long ago, she was in a street car accident and three ribs were broken. She had to stay in a hospital for several weeks and went home still wearing a plaster cast. About two days after she reached home there was a dinner given by the Society of Women Geographers, which she was anxious to attend. A friend called up to tell her how much everyone would miss her.

"Why should they miss me?" said Miss Peck. "I certainly will be there. I have asked two guests."

And she was there, plaster cast and all. You couldn't keep a mountain climber from climbing out of bed when she felt like it. The same spirit that took her to the tip of lofty peaks took her to that dinner. Were I awarding a medal for gameness, it would go to Miss Annie Smith Peck.

Texas Orders Its Oil Wells to Gush No More

Austin, Texas.—The old days of wells throwing floods of oil over derelict tops are doomed to end. Orders of the state railroad commission, supervising oil conservation, forbid bringing a well in over the top. It must be provided with equipment to make it flow through the side. The only value of letting a well flow over the top was its advertising value, according to the oil supervisors. Such a display was a good way to attract attention to a field and sell stock. Actually it caused danger of fire.

The Kitchen Cabinet

A Company Meal
The meal to serve guests may be just the same foods one serves the family with a little elaboration in sauces and perhaps an added dish or two, such as a fruit cocktail or compote, with ice cream in dainty glasses with a fruit or nut sauce for the dessert.

Every housewife has certain dishes which she prepares particularly well, and when entertaining it is best to use those which by long practice have been made familiar. Trying out a new dish on guests is not always a happy experience.

If a fruit is served as a first course it should be in small quantities, not to destroy the appetite but rather to whet it; too large a portion destroys the purpose of the course.

Never serve fruit twice in the same meal; this is true of any other form of food. If tomato soup forms a part of the menu do not serve tomatoes again, even as a garnish.

For the same reason that butter is never served at a formal dinner, neither is mayonnaise dressing; it is too rich and heavy; the meal is rich enough without butter or heavy dressings. French dressing is used on salads, which may be varied by adding crumbled Roquefort cheese, or something of that nature.

Salad, unless accompanied by wafers, or toast, or cheese, is never served as a course alone.

One enjoys the tomatoes with the roast or cucumbers with the fish, where they taste so good and where they belong.

As we avoid serving the same vegetable or fruit twice in a meal, so we should avoid serving food cooked in the same way; never more than once fried, baked or boiled thing at a time.

Another thing to remember, is to avoid using colors that clash, such as tomatoes, beets and carrots; also avoid all one color. If you blend your colors the vitamins will take care of themselves.

GAME OF TEPEE

This game is for two players only. Each represents a tribe and has his encampment on opposite sides of the river. Each has six small buttons, or men, in his tribe. The object of the game is to get all six men over into the enemies' encampment taking possession of his tepees without mishap, or with as few as possible. The one succeeding in getting all six men entrenched safely in the enemies' tepees first wins the game. Each moves and plays in turn. If you have no dice to throw to determine the number of marks you move each turn, cut a strip of paper into segments each bearing a number not higher than six. Turn these over and draw each turn for the number of marks to move. If in moving a player lands on the same mark as occupied by another Indian, he must retreat all the way back to his tepee. If an Indian of the opposite side reaches his opponent's tepee before he has left it, he is blockaded and has to wait until this enemy moves his Indian out of the tepee. The skill of the

HOW IT STARTED

By JEAN NEWTON

"To Die in One's Shoes"
"I WANT to die in my shoes," is the expressed wish of many an active man or woman whose only fear is dependence, becoming a burden on others. To them the greatest boon that can be granted a human being is to continue useful and active until the last moment, to "die in one's shoes."

It is interesting to note, however, that this connotation is one somewhat modified since the days of the origin of the expression. The first recorded use of it is found in Urquhart's "Rabelais," published in 1653, where it signified dying a violent death, the popular current inference being death by hanging.

Texas Goes Forward

Group of Oil Wells in Texas.

Prepared by National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.—WNU Service.

WHILE scientists are penetrating the black depths of caves in Texas to trace the lives of their early occupants—among America's oldest inhabitants—the Lone Star state swiftly marches in the opposite direction toward modern progress.

Texas is so big! So big that some one said the people of El Paso live at those of Galveston as being off the easterners. In terms of people, area, animals, crops, and natural wealth she is so big and her regional interests are so diverse that she has outgrown her very constitution, as a boy outgrows his pants. Laws good for east Texas may be bad for west Texas. States policies agreeable to the natives on the lower Rio Grande may of our South and West, nothing has changed more completely than the Texas cattle ranches. Today the original high-speed Texas longhorn, that streak of hoofs, horns and yellow hide that used to run with the deer and wild mustangs, is practically extinct. Yet, in his time, he was the basis of vast fortunes.

With the banished longhorn there also passed from this wild-cattle arena most of those rollicking, hard-riding, quick-shooting heroes whose names still live in the old cowboy ballads. When barbed wire was invented, romance and adventure died—on the Texas plains. Freedom was no more.

As to Texas, the climatic, geographic, floral fact remains that she is still the biggest natural cow pasture in the United States. At this very minute millions of bulky bovines are quietly along the banks of the Brazos, a little more than 100 years ago, the Texas population, including Mexicans and Indians, was probably not more than 8,000 or 10,000. In the next quarter of a century the state had only 100,000 white inhabitants and 35,000 slaves. Not till railways began to spread, in the seventies, was its growth at all rapid. In the last 20 years it has gained more than 2,000,000.

From the Middle Western states, since 1920, more than 100,000 people have come each year to settle in Texas. Of these immigrants, 80 per cent have settled in towns and cities. The remaining 14 per cent, going to the country, have put close to 2,000,000 acres of new land into crops. Since the end of the World war, it is estimated that probably 600,000 people have settled on new farms in the vast Panhandle region.

Less Than Half Cultivated.

The enormous agricultural potentiality of Texas is shown by the fact that, although less than half of her arable land has been put under cultivation, yet in a good year she produces a billion-dollar crop.

More than a billion dollars' worth of oil has been produced in Texas in five years and the state probably has more lignite, or brown coal, than the whole famous Ruhr region of Germany. Her deposits run into billions of tons. No one knows how much. Her industrial population, though long of minor consequence, is now increasing fast.

With her abundant oil, gas, lignite, iron ore, and other minerals, the resulting gradual increase of trade and industry is bound to bring substantial growth to certain Texas cities.

On the maps of the United States used by the general staff at Washington certain little flags are flying. They indicate the strategic cities of America, such as New York, Chicago, San Francisco, and San Antonio, Texas. Besides its place on the map, among the things which give a city strategic importance are safe and adequate food and fuel, in easy reach, and ample transport. In these respects San Antonio, as well as Houston and Dallas, is well supplied.

To a singular degree, east Texas, with her oil, lignite, and other minerals, her lumber, her excellent means of transport, and her easy access to vast meat, grain and natural gas supplies, is a strategic spot whereon it is easy to visualize a great southwestern city.

Already Houston is conspicuous. It is the greatest spot-cotton market in the world. On its ship canal it has huge storage for export oil and grain—grain sent from Iowa, Kansas and Nebraska for Liverpool and Europe. Fed by 17 railways and served by numerous steamship and tanker lines, it trades with the world. Its destiny is one of large possibilities.

Bigger and Better Cattle.

In all the kaleidoscopic industrial transitions that are sweeping so much the campus of the state university.

When Cabeza de Vaca crossed Texas in 1535 the Indians gave him garments of cotton. From the few plants of those early days there has developed a production of astounding magnitude. At times Texas' crop has amounted to more than 40 per cent of all cotton grown in the United States. In the record year, 1928, it reached the amazing total of 5,030,831 500-pound bales.

Taking a leaf from the book of North Carolina, Texas is beginning to build up her most obvious industry the cotton mill. She enjoys three of the most vital factors for their profitable operation: adequate labor, cotton "at the gate of the cotton patch," and fuel for power.

Developing Its Resources.

Like North Carolina, also, Texas is setting about methodically to make the most of all her natural gifts. The newly formed Society for the Scientific Development of Texas Natural Resources is just what its name implies.

Vast as many resources of Texas are known to be, further surveys must yet be made to determine the best local industrial use of the many mineral deposits which exist. Already the annual mineral production, exclusive of oil, is valued at $70,000,000. Take potash. A thorough survey of the Texas deposits may reveal enough of these salts to make the United States forever independent of the present French-German potash monopoly.

Texas produces $50,000,000 of net surplus wealth each year. It is the aim of the Scientific society, by publishing freely the results of its surveys, to aid this home capital in the development of mining and industry.

Texas, never a territory, entered the Union on her own terms. Shrewdly, she kept title to her own public lands. Half this vast domain she gave to her schools. Her university received more than two million acres. Oil found on these lands has made the University of Texas very rich.

Flocks of Americans have seen Texas from the windows of transcontinental trains. To such train riders it seems largely a flat, dry, almost treeless country. That's the fault of men who located the railroads. Parts of Texas, like the great barrancas of the Panhandle, or the Santa Helena gorge in Brewster county, are wild and picturesque. Cross-country train trippers killing time at bridge between Kansas City and Los Angeles, see nothing of these rougher, wilder regions. Likewise, by hundreds of miles, they miss the verdant, fruitful, subtropical Gulf coast, with its palms and beaches, its pleasure resorts, and its busy, growing tourist traffic. From all over the Middle West increasing numbers of visitors go now each winter to Galveston, Corpus Christi, and other Gulf towns.

Further south and along the Rio Grande, between Laredo and Brownsville, has developed rapidly a vegetable and citrus-growing region of wealth and importance.

"I've got a warm feeling for Target Tobacco, though I don't happen to be a smoker myself."

"My husband switched to Target from ready-mades. He thought he wasn't going to like rolling his own. But now he says he'd never smoke any other kind. He tells me that Target is real cigarette tobacco, a blend of Virginia, Burley and Turkish tobaccos just like the ready-mades use. And he says that with those gummy papers you get free with Target, it's easy to roll a firm, round cigarette."

"I'll take my husband's word for all that, but I do know that we save real money every week. My husband rolls thirty or more cigarettes from each package of Target. And that means a big saving. Figure it out. Target is only 10 cents a package."

AND GET THIS! The U. S. Government tax on 10 cigarettes amounts to 6¢. On 10 cigarettes you roll from Target Tobacco the tax is just about 1¢. No wonder you get such value for a dime!

Economic Leaders Will Speak on Newspaper Hour

Outstanding economic problems of the day will be discussed in the National Farm and Home Hour Saturday, April 30, by L. A. Downs, president of the Illinois Central railroad, Benjamin M. Anderson, Jr., economist of the Chase National bank of the city of New York, and United States Senator Otis F. Glenn of Illinois.

The broadcast will be under the direction of the corn belt farm dairies, a group of dairy agricultural newspapers which circulate principally among the larger producers of live stock. In the group are the Chicago Drivers Journal, Kansas City Drivers Telegram, Omaha Journal-Stockman, and St. Louis Daily Livestock Reporter.

Charles E. Snyder, editor of the Chicago Drivers Journal, will be in charge of the broadcast and will introduce the speakers who are to devote their attention to presenting for the farm radio audience discussions of existing economic conditions of the day.

The program promises to attract the attention of vast audiences particularly because it will bring before the NBO microphones three distinguished leaders in the economic world.

The program will be brought to listeners as part of the plan to feature the messages of practically every important agricultural organization in the country. The speakers were chosen by Mr. Snyder because of their long experience and contacts with our economic problems.

Concrete That Floats

A block of concrete floated on water, bobbing up and down like a cork, at the school of practical science, University of Toronto, recently, when Prof. G. R. Anderson, carried out an unusual experiment. Known as cellular concrete, this floating stone was made on a system, analogous to raising a bread with yeast. The cement, gravel, water and sand, were put into a mixer and a carbon dioxide forming chemical was added. The cement then set into a hard porous substance lighter than wood. Professor Anderson says it has remarkable resistance to sound.

Where Does She Get Her "Pep?"

SHE doesn't look seventy. Nor feel that old. The woman who stimulates her organs can have energy that women half her age will envy!

At middle-age your vital organs begin to slow down. You may not be sick, simply sluggish. But why endure a condition of half-health when there's a stimulant that will stir a stagnant system to new life and energy in a week's time?

This remarkable stimulant is perfectly harmless. It is, in fact, a family doctor's prescription. So, if you're tired of trying every patent medicine that comes along, tell the druggist you want a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepin. Take a bit of this delicious syrup every day or so, until you know by the way you feel that your lazy liver is again active, and your bowels are poison-free.

Men, women, and children who are run-down, who tire easily, get bilious spells or have frequent headaches, are soon straightened out when they get this prescriptional preparation of pure pepin, active senna, and fresh laxative herbs. (Syrup pepin is all the help the bowels need, and you do not form the very bad habit of always taking cathartics.)

Keep a bottle of Dr. Caldwell's syrup pepin in the house, and take a stimulating spoonful every now and then. It is all that a great many people ever take to keep strong and vigorous, and absolutely free from constipation.

To every mother who can't nurse her baby... NEWS!

When a mother's milk fails, nothing is more important than this—to be sure that the food that goes into her baby's bottle gives him just what he needs to make him rosy and healthy now, and build him a firm foundation for future health.

Test made with fifty babies

Recently, two physicians—specialists in baby diet—conducted a test with fifty average babies, to throw new light on this subject.

The food tested is one unique in infant feeding history. Next to mother's milk, it has raised more babies than any other food in the world. Over a period of 75 years, it has given millions their start in life. Throughout America, there are healthy babies, children, grown-ups, to prove the value of this amazingly digestible food.

Yet never before had scientists put this famous food—Eagle Brand Milk—to such a thorough, controlled, scientific test. What would such a test reveal?

Simple diet proves builder of 100% babies

For months, the two physicians fed those fifty babies on Eagle Brand—checking with closest care every detail of their health and growth. Bone structure was studied with the X-ray. Tooth development was watched. Weight and height were periodically recorded. Blood tests were made...

And those fifty Eagle Brand babies, judged by every known test, proved themselves splendidly nourished. This simple diet—Eagle Brand, with merely the usual supplementary foods—had proved equal to the building of a 100% baby.

Now, science joins the millions of mothers who say, "We have our proof that Eagle Brand Milk is a truly valuable and effective food for a baby."

If you cannot nurse your baby, try Eagle Brand. Easy to prepare—merely add boiled water. Always pure, safe, free from dangerous germs. Keeps indefinitely in any climate. Simple feeding directions are on the label.

"The usual supplementary foods, of course, are orange or lemon juice, and cod-liver oil or other source of the anti-rachitic Vitamin D."

GINTHER FOR CLERK.

Vote for Hoff for Sheriff.

Mrs. C. C. Shull spent Sunday in the Guy Platter home.

My official record speaks for itself. John P. Hoff, your Sheriff.

Mrs. Maud Monroe was a Sunday guest of Mr. and Mrs. Marshall Andress.

County Treasurer's office will be open Friday evening from 7 to 8:30 to accommodate tax payers.

M. M. Maxwell.

Mr. and Mrs. John Timmerman of Spencerville, Mrs. Mae Miser of Garrett and Mrs. Belle Woodcox called on Mrs. Nan Lysher Friday afternoon.

The marriage of Miss Agnes Horn, telephone manager at St. Joe, to Mr. Kenneth Cunningham of Hicksville, was solemnized last Saturday at 10:45 A. M. by the Rev. Wickersham, pastor of the Auburn M. E. Church. Congratulations.

Mrs. Chas. Smith, S., and Mrs. Chas. Smith, Jr. and son, Rolla and Mrs. Kelley of north of town were callers Monday afternoon of Mrs. Clara McCann. Ross Bishop and family were visitors in the same home in the evening.

Mr. and Mrs. C. R. Price, in company with Mr. and Mrs. Laney Gee, were visitors at the home of Glen Abel and wife of Montpelier, Ohio, on Monday. They called to see Tom Abel who is critically ill, and report his condition not improved.

Mrs. John Hart reports having received word of the serious illness of Mrs. Nellie Garton, of Coldwater, Mich., and that she is in the city hospital. The Gartons were residents of St. Joe for several years, and their friends here will be sorry to learn of her condition.

Mrs. E. H. Conine of Hicksville entertained the Rural Housewives. The guests were Mrs. W. David, Mrs. J. David and Mrs. Gladys Brink. Mrs. Clyde Hart won the prize and Mrs. Brink gave a very interesting reading. The hostess served sandwiches, wafers, ice cream, cake and coffee.

TREASURES FORGOTTEN IN HOTELS BY GUESTS

Absent-Minded Forget Jew- elry, Coats, False Teeth.

Chicago.—It is not the typically absent-minded professor type, but the bustling business man or salesman who most often leave articles ranging from new shirts to false teeth in his hotel room when he departs. Chief house detectives of large Chicago hotels are responsible for that information.

The assistant manager of one hotel, who is also chief of its house officers and has been for several years, reports a list of articles found in hotel rooms which includes bass drums, large-sized radios, swords and jewelry.

A diamond ring valued at $12,000 was left in a hotel room by a woman who was so forgetful she could not remember where she left it. After writing to hotels throughout the country she got in touch with the hotel and her ring was returned.

Sets of false teeth and odd single teeth are often found in rooms after guests leave. At one hotel it was said that many sets of false teeth are held for months without ever being called for by their owners.

A fine gold watch was left at another hotel. It was inside a pillow case and was not seen by the maid. She tossed the bed linen down a soiled clothes chute, and as the laundry does not touch linens by hand, the watch went through all the washing machinery. There was little left when it was discovered.

Some women guests who have three or four fur coats have left sable, mink, and other valuable coats in their rooms. A horn was found once. Convention delegates who bring fancy dress uniforms and gird on their swords for parade, often leave their swords.

Pajamas, slippers and shaving apparatus was most commonly left. Watches are frequently left by busy salesmen. Often a man leaves a pair of old slippers on purpose. They are held 90 days if not called for. Men sometimes send for an old worn-out pair of bedroom slippers because they have formed an attachment for them. On a rainy day a dozen or more umbrellas will be found in the lobby alone.

Women are the worst for writing back to recover articles they have left. They will write back for a handkerchief, for a toothbrush, and an old one at that, for face creams and lace collars.

Seventy per cent of the persons who are forgetful get in touch with the hotels to recover their property. Telephone calls to inquire if an article of jewelry or some other treasured possession had been found, have been received from San Francisco, New York and all parts of the country.

Entirely sober business men will dash out of the hotel madly, forgetting their suitcase filled with all their belongings, and wire from another city to have it sent on.

A man may buy some new shirts and leave them instead of his old ones, or he may leave the old ones on purpose—in which case they are retained the full time. Articles of sentimental value, such as photographs, letters, or an old hat some one has formed a fondness for, occasionally are the objects of frantic search by the person who forgot them until he locates what hotel he has left them in.

Famed Dartmouth Indian Changes His Feather

Hanover, N. H.—After two years' research by a Dartmouth graduate, that college's Indian symbol is now believed to be historically correct.

The Indian has always been to Dartmouth what the bulldog is to Yale or the tiger to Princeton. The standard Dartmouth Indian invariably has been portrayed as wearing an elaborate feathered headdress.

Walter Beach Humphrey, Dartmouth '11, widely known artist, found that the elaborate headdress was associated with Redskins of the western plains, such as the Sioux, whereas the eastern Indian connected with the college's early history was of the Mohican type.

So now the Dartmouth Indian, Mohicanlike, is pictured with a solitary feather dangling from a topknot of hair.

Briton Perfects World's Strongest Searchlight

London.—A searchlight generating 3,000,000 candle power and throwing forth such light as would make reading possible six miles away, has been perfected by Maj. J. C. Savage. This searchlight, which is undergoing tests by the war office, will have the effect of making invasion by enemy airplanes an impossibility. It throws a beam of light into the sky, immediately giving visibility to the aircraft and at the same time providing a means of arriving at a range by which anti-aircraft guns could fire at the raider.

IDEA OF ARMORED VESSELS IN 1861

Naval Officials Quick to See Possibilities.

One of those interesting minor notes on naval history was supplied in a Lowell lecture at Boston when Professor Baxter, of Harvard, traced from a re-examination of the original documents, the development of the navy's ironclad program at the beginning of the Civil war—a program of which the Monitor was merely the most celebrated product.

Mr. Baxter, according to the Boston Transcript, has annihilated the charge of obstructive traditionalism sometimes leveled at the Navy department in connection with the Monitor. Capt. Liddell Hart's dictum that war offices always begin a war at a point somewhat behind that which they had reached at the end of the preceding one apparently did not apply to the navy in 1861. Even before the fall of Sumter the navy was considering the first of a flood of proposals for the construction of ironclad men-of-war, and the chief of the bureau of construction and repair was soon to advocate not one but a whole fleet of these radical innovations.

Many people—Donald McKay, the creator of the great clipper ships, was one—were advocating armored vessels, and the idea of turret mountings for the guns had already been advanced by a British naval officer the year before. The Navy department went to work in a methodical fashion suggestive of World war days; it convened a board which studied the proposals and by September was able to recommend three different types for experimental construction. One of them was the especially radical Monitor. She had the luck first to meet the test of battle and to pass it magnificently, and after that the construction of the large fleet of double-turreted monitors went on rapidly. The navy was able to take the very latest ideas available, study them, adopt and test models and then go into "quantity production" for the winning of the war.

The story is not without its modern application. It is an earlier instance of the "time lag" essential in the development of any new weapon for war services, a phenomenon recently pointed out by a British writer, Victor Lefebvre, as a possible means for arriving at scientific disarmament systems. Another point is the fact that the navy, even with this prompt and intelligent handling of the situation, got what was actually rather a poor weapon as the result of the haste of working under war pressure.

The Monitor's victory in her one battle was to influence our naval construction down to Spanish war days; actually, however, the raft idea, which was Ericsson's essential contribution, was not a sound one. The turret stayed, but the raft was not copied in other navies and finally disappeared in our own. But mistakes are unavoidable when a new type has to be built in large numbers all at once.—New York Herald Tribune.

Cataclysm

For 100% Health

There is something vibrant and magnetic about the truly healthy man or woman, who is satisfied and contented with life. That "something" attracts people. Wins confidence. Arouses and holds affection. This vitality and enthusiasm of youth are priceless. Guard them with Fellows' Syrup, the fine old tonic which doctors recommend. It restores and strengthens. Improves appetite. You sleep better and feel better. Your vigor and endurance return. For just one week, try Fellows' Syrup, which you can get at your druggist's. The results will amaze and delight you.

FELLOWS' SYRUP

WILL BE ISOLATED IN CANADIAN NORTH

Lonely Year Scheduled for Scientific Party.

Great Britain's share in next year's celebration of the jubilee of the Polar year will mean the isolation of a small party of scientific observers for about a year at a station in the north of Canada. During those winter months they will have no contact with the outside world. They are unlikely even to be in wireless communication. Their only transport will be dog sledges and their only chance of getting fresh food will depend on the success with which they can use the snow and ice for the purpose of refrigeration.

The party will go to their lonely post on the most northerly arm of the Great Slave lake as soon as the ice breaks up at the end of June. They will reach the settlement of Fort Rae in time to make preparations and do some bartering with the Indians before the winter settles down again on this wild country and the Indians go off once more on the trail for the pelts by which they make a living. Some of them may drift back to the settlement again toward Christmas time and may have moose and caribou flesh to barter for flour or implements. If that can be kept fresh by burying it in the snow the party's rations will be the more varied and nutritious, but if the cold storage is unsatisfactory they will have to content themselves with tinned goods. They will be living in an Indian reserve and will therefore not be at liberty to shoot the only animals which might serve as food.

This settlement is little farther north than the Shetlands, yet it is one of the coldest places in the world. In the winter it is not unusual to find from 100 to 110 degrees of frost. Fort Rae is a very primitive settlement. It consists of a Hudson's Bay trader, one rival trader who is an Assyrian and another who is a Russian, one Canadian mounted policeman, and a Roman Catholic missionary. It is open to the rest of the world for about six weeks from the beginning of July, and even then it cannot be reached by any regular transport service.

Lifelong Warfare on Insect Pests

Award of the Copper gold medal "for distinguished service to agriculture," carrying an honorarium of $5,000, has been made to Dr. L. O. Howard, a government bug expert who, on a small official salary, has waged a lifelong battle against insect pests.

"He has made a great contribution to the present and future happiness of the American people," says the Woman's Home Companion in its announcement of the award. "He has for years been fighting the greatest of all wars—the war against insects. Insects, as he has shown, steal two billion dollars a year from us. They nullify the labor of a million men."

"They reached their development millions of years ago. We are the newcomers on earth and our foothold is not yet sure. Doctor Howard believes that it is still possible that in some distant future the last living thing on the expiring earth may be a bug feeding on the last bit of plant life. Thus far, indeed, the insects have held their own against us. But we cannot doubt that mankind will eventually win."

Takes Seventeen Years for Locust to Mature

The 17-year locusts, as the insect known to science as the cicada is called, appears in the North more often than every 17 years, but this is due to the fact that there are several cycles of them in existence. The cicadas actually require 17 years to mature from the egg stage to the final stage of the full-grown insect. In the South the period is about four years shorter.

The adults lay the eggs in slits in the bark of twigs of trees. When the eggs hatch, the young is a nymph with legs, but no wings. They drop from the tree to the ground and, burrowing beneath the soil, reach the roots, where they find their sustenance during the years they are progressing toward maturity. When the 17 years have been accomplished they work to the surface, and their shell coating splits, permitting the full-grown insect to emerge.

PRESIDENT'S PARDON MAKES COUPLE HAPPY

Resume Honeymoon Halted by Immigration Laws.

Chicago.—An interrupted honeymoon was resumed recently. A bride returned to her policeman husband, and three motherless children found a new mother, when President Herbert Hoover gave a personal and unconditional pardon to Mrs. Joseph Killian.

nee Stefania Pozzato, stranded for eight months in Windsor, Can.

Red tape, precedent, passports and charges of falsification and moral turpitude figured largely in the romantic story which has just come to its happy ending.

Last August Policeman Joseph P. Killian thought he had settled all the difficulties his fiancée encountered through her illegal entrance into the United States.

He married her, with permission of Secretary of Labor William N. Doak and took her honeymooning to Canada that she might re-enter the country as the wife of an American citizen and a legitimate citizen in her own right.

But the Department of Labor slipped a cog, decided that Stefania herself was responsible for the errors on her passport and Stefania was ordered to remain outside the country.

So she found herself stranded in a cheap boarding house in Windsor for eight months, during which she wrote adoring letters to her husband and dreamed of the things they could do for his three youngsters, the oldest just six.

And then the hand of the President scrawled a full pardon to exonerate the exiled young bride and restored her to her adopted home.

Stefania, at last has returned to her home and her husband. Uncle Sam has a new citizen and three little babes a new mother.

American Rackets Reach London and Cause Worry

London.—American rackets often take a long time to get here, but they arrive eventually.

Theater managers right now are alarmed at the operations of strangers, who have begun selling tickets above the box office prices to those waiting in line outside. It has been done here before, but never on the scale of the scalpers who "work" the New York theaters and the world series baseball games.

Whereas the American scalper would scorn to handle tickets selling for less than $5, London's scalpers deal in three shilling pasteboards.

The chief difference between English and American racketeers seems to be that the former work alone rather than in gangs. Blackmailing is extensive, and recently several bold entrepreneurs have undertaken to sell "protection" to various trades—substage being the alternative, of course. One instance was that of a fish merchant, who supplied a large hotel and who refused to buy "protection." He lost his contract with the hotel because, it was stated, his fish had not been up to standard. Later he discovered that the fish had been kept for several days before being cooked and otherwise tampered with.

Quake Expert Studies Earth in Buried Vault

Santa Clara, Calif.—In a concrete vault 20 feet below ground on the University of Santa Clara campus, Dr. Albert J. Newland, disciple of the late Father Jerome Ricard, Jesuit "père de la raine," conducts his "earthquake factory."

Every night for 25 years Doctor Newland has descended the narrow passage to the tomblike chamber, bolted the single, narrow door of the vault, and kept his vigil with the earth's quiverings and tremors.

Only the weird blue glow of five "light pencils" from his seismographs illuminates his "factory" chambers.

Within the vault's 3-foot concrete walls, Doctor Newland checks the earth's tremblings, the expansion and contraction of its surface due to cold spells, heat waves, other causes. These are recorded by the "light pencils."

Doctor Newland's "earthquake factory" is buried deep in the ground so that surface vibration will not affect its delicate instruments. The seismographs, firmly lodged on a concrete pier, record the nature, location, and time of occurrence of disturbances.

John Gresham's Girl

THE STORY

By chance James Lee meets Lucy Gresham, daughter of Sir John Gresham, wealthy ship builder. Lee, unjustly accused of robbing the Gresham firm, was sent to prison. He blames Oliver Ames, Lucy's cousin, and Gresham's manager, and seeks revenge. Lee inherits wealth, and in compliance with the will, changes his name from Warrington. He secures an invitation to the girl's birthday party. Lucy is practically engaged to Ames. She meets Lee, who makes love to her, planning thereby to hurt Gresham and Ames. With Gresham's approval, Lucy and Lee become engaged.

CHAPTER III—Continued

But she rewarded him with a quick little look of delight, as she caught his big hand in hers, and turned the old-fashioned ring round.

"It's a sweet," she said softly. He pulled it off and slid it on to the third finger of her left hand.

"It's rather large, I'm afraid," he said. But she only answered, "It's all warm from being on your finger," and she raised it and laid it against her cheek, caressingly. Then she looked up at him with laughing eyes.

"Now, I'll wear a great big one as well, even a flashing one, if you want me to; as a concession to the wicked, conquering cave-man in you, that wants to advertise his conquest."

He laughed with her, not quite certain; then put out a hand and drew her close to him.

"I must go and you must sleep. Lucy, you'll marry me soon?"

"As soon as you like," she promised. He drew a breath.

"Then it will be soon as it is possible," he told her. "Good night, Lucy."

She raised exquisite eyes to his. "Good night," she said softly.

"Jim . . . Jim . . ." She spoke the name as if the sound of it were sweet music to her; then drew away, adding:

"Jim, wasn't it queer, the way we met? The odd chance of it. And then the necklace breaking. . . . As if warning me that nothing in my whole life was ever going to be the same again! And, you see, it isn't."

His arms caught her close to him, at that; so close that the strength of them was painful.

"Nothing in your life is ever going to be the same again," he repeated, steadying his voice with an effort. "The symbol was true in that."

"True and wonderful," she whispered, breathless in his embrace. "Jim, don't crush me all to nothing, dear. I'm not going to try to escape. . . . I don't want my life to be the same again. . . . I want it to be like this. . . . with you. . . ." She raised her face to his, and once again, his lips were close upon hers.

That was how James Lee won John Gresham's girl. Taking the sweetness of her lips, for his loveless kisses, giving reverent triumph in exchange for her loving heart.

Three weeks later they were married. He hurried it on, anxious to have it safely over before Ames came back from Norway. He was not entirely sure that Ames would not recognize him. As a matter of fact, Ames was in no hurry to get back. When he heard from Lucy, telling of her engagement to Lee, he made business an excuse for staying away till the first agony of the news had subsided. She had written as tenderly as she could.

During her whirlwind engagement Lucy learned many things about the man she loved.

And he certainly managed to make that three weeks a time of dreams!

His wooing was a quick, determined affair that swept all before it; impatient enough to have been the wooing of an ardent love, instead of, as it was, a wooing of revenge. And, as he had told himself, Lucy made it easy. She adored him for his difference from other men; for his splendid size and strength; for his curious brooding silence; and the sudden tempest of emotion, that made him catch her close in an embrace that had something almost desperate in it, as if he were afraid that he might, after all, lose her. She teased him about this once, and he looked at her startled, and after a moment, said in an odd way:

"Well, it's true; I am afraid that something will steal you from me and destroy all."

Then finished: "All my hopes." She laughed at him tenderly, for his fears, and, because she did not remotely understand the reason of them, loved him all the more for them.

If there were moments—moments, perhaps, when she smuggled into his arms, confiding and content; or when she said some little, specially fond thing; or when, with the slightest imaginable taking through of her rather shy reserve, her lips would cling a touch more closely than usual when he took his good-night kiss—if at these moments the voice of conscience told him that it was a dangerously thing he was doing, he turned a deaf ear to it and refused to listen. Didn't he owe them everything in the nature of revenge, that he could possibly say? Were they to be allowed to rob him of those three years, and get off scot-free?

Their wedding was a quiet one; it could scarcely be anything else, in the time. A few relatives and intimate friends were at the church; and, afterward, there was a small gathering at Sir John's house.

Lucy wasn't surprised to get a note from Ames saying that he could not possibly be back in time to be present at her wedding. She had felt sure that he would not come, and was glad, too, that he decided against it.

Jocelyn Upton was another who begged to be excused.

The honeymoon was to be spent at Lee's house in Hertfordshire, and during the afternoon they drove there, in his big car. As they left the town behind them, she put out a shy little hand, the one that held the bright new ring, and he caught it quickly and held it tight.

"Mrs. James Lee. . . . That's your name now. Can you realize it?" he asked abruptly.

She shook her head, looking up at him, sweet-eyed and shy.

"Not yet, Jim. But I'm trying to. And it sounds so wonderful, doesn't it?"

"Wonderful," he agreed, and then: "Lucy Gresham. . . . Mrs. James Lee," he added, saying the two names very slowly, as if the juxtaposition of them were very sweet in his ears. With no remnant of the inkling of the truth, it was all too easy for her to ascribe the triumph in his voice, and the quick, close strength of his hand around hers, to love. . . .

Lee's thoughts going on into the future, pictured the moment when he should make his revelation to the father who so adored this girl-wife of his; to Ames who was one of the men who would have given all he possessed to be in his place. But that moment was not to be yet. There were other things to do first. . . . He looked down at Lucy. She was his. His to hurt; his to use as a means of hurting others. Skies above! Life was beginning to give him something of his own back! They thought to break him, and it was in his power to break them. He had taken this lovely, happy child from them, and made her love him.

This exultant mood mounted higher and higher in his heart, until he was intoxicated with it. It gave him a curious, somber brilliance; like happiness, held in check; like the highest spirits, kept on the curb. A far less blindly loving bride than Lucy, might have been deceived by the way he lifted her out of the car, when it drew up at the pillared porch of his country house, and ran up the shallow stone steps and in through the wide-open door, holding her high and triumphantly in his strong arms.

"I've carried my bride across the threshold!" he whispered, an odd excitement lending a tremor to his voice. He set her down, as the housekeeper, Mrs. Jebb, a stout, motherly woman, came bustling into the wide hall.

Lucy found herself a moment or two later, following a quiet, efficient maid up to her room. Turned back, at the top of the first flight of stairs, she saw Lee standing in the hall looking up at her, his eyes dark and burning.

When she joined him again, he took her out into the lovely grounds, and showed her the best points of his little estate. The mood of exulting triumph had made Lee more radiantly high-spirited than Lucy had ever seen him. She was amazed at his manner; the moroseness was gone; he talked and laughed; introduced her, with a lot of exuberant nonsense, to the horses and the dogs; put his arm around her and held her so close beside him, as they walked through the little sun-dappled wood that she had to protest, laughingly, at which he stopped, swung her round so that she faced him and said: "Aren't you mine?"

She looked up, nodding her shining gold head:

"Yes."

"But even if I am, I must be allowed to breathe!" she said, laughing still. He laughed with her, then, though his dark eyes burned strangely intense, down into hers, and thereafter, had held her more gently.

All through dinner this mood held. They had coffee on the veranda outside the drawing room window, and afterward went down into the shadowy garden. Lucy was silent, now, but Lee's high-spirited mood still swept him along before it, until he saw the yellow light shining through the drawing room windows go out suddenly.

Then:

"It's getting late. Mrs. Jebb is putting out the lights. I suppose she thinks we have gone. . . . up. . . . already."

"Yes," she answered, her voice very low and still. "I'll. . . . go in, now, Jim. . . ." She moved away from him, suddenly shy, and started for the door, but his big hand caught her back, and with his arm around her, closely, he made her go into the house with him.

In the lighted hall he released her, turned swiftly, a sudden odd laugh breaking from him, shot the door, shot the big bolts top and bottom, then faced her again. . . .

And with the closing of that door the laugh died, abruptly, on his lips; the gleam faded from his eyes and he looked at her with a strange expression almost of bewilderment.

Whether there was some symbol in the closing of that big door that struck through to him, or whether it was the sight of her so small and slight, standing there in the big, square hall, he could not have told. But something happened to make him feel suddenly like a monster who has trapped a tiny, innocent, and confiding thing, and in that single second of time, his high exultation came crashing down and lay in ruins round his feet.

He fought the feeling; fought it fiercely.

"Steady. . . . Steady," he warned himself. "This is nonsense; idiotic weakness. . . . You owe her, and all her kind, every evil it is in your power to bring them. . . . You've got her; she's given herself to you freely. . . . Then take her, you fool. . . . take her. . . ."

But he stood back against the door, unmoving.

She raised her eyes to his, eyes that seemed very tenderly, very shyly, but entirely confidently, to implore the mercy not of the hate which she knew nothing of, but of the love she thought was in his heart.

"I'll go up. . . ." she said, her voice almost soundless. Still, he said nothing, and after a second's hesitation, she turned and ran upstairs. He stood looking after her, still fighting down this new thing that had happened and was threatening to bring his plans to nothing. . . . But it was as merciless against him as he had been against that girl who had married him this morning. . . . What had he done to her? To that little, defenseless girl? Caught her; trapped her; taken her love and let her think that he gave his own. . . .

Why should this come to him now?

Then:

"This isn't true, is it? You. . . . you aren't really telling me this! I mean. . . . it's some sort of. . . . dream, isn't it?" The words quivered pitifully to silence.

"It is true," he said doggedly.

"That you don't love me?" She was still unable to believe.

"And I don't love you," he replied. "And I don't love you."

She looked at him a moment longer, then drew a deep breath and passed a shaking hand across her forehead.

"You are telling me this seriously? Seriously, Jim?" she said in a tremendous whisper.

Even now, he believed, it would not be too late to retract the terrible truth, to blot it from his mind with protestations of love, and win her back to faith in him. For she was still half-incredulous. Even now, it would not be too late to save his plans from destruction. And everything in him that was set upon revenge, cried out to him to do this. To take her into his arms, tell her it had all been a stupid joke; a test; anything so that he could kiss away the horror that moment had been to her. . . . But he didn't do it. Couldn't. Instead he answered:

"Seriously, you'd better believe it."

CHAPTER IV

Lucy Learns the Truth

Even as he told her this he cursed himself for telling it. He hadn't meant to; he had meant to go slowly, working toward the completion of his revenge in his own way, until the moment was ripe for his triumph. His marriage with John Gresham's girl had been only the beginning of the vengeful schemes which seethed in his brain. He had laid his plans so carefully, he had taken his steps so cautiously, yet here he was, jeopardizing them, perhaps even wrecking them, at the very start. And why? Why? All because he was fool enough to be oddly moved by her. . . . Because he was fool enough to be stirred by her youth and littleness; her sweetness, because the closing of a door behind her had made him feel like an ogre who has trapped a trusting little fairy. . . .

All this and more, went through and through his mind as he stood looking, sullen-eyed, down at Lucy, while she, horrified, incredulous, stared up at him.

"Jim," she said, in a low voice. "This isn't true, is it? You. . . . you aren't really telling me this! I mean. . . . it's some sort of. . . . dream, isn't it?" The words quivered pitifully to silence.

"It is true," he said doggedly.

"That you don't love me?" She was still unable to believe.

"And I don't love you," he replied. "And I don't love you."

She looked at him a moment longer, then drew a deep breath and passed a shaking hand across her forehead.

"You are telling me this seriously? Seriously, Jim?" she said in a tremendous whisper.

Even now, he believed, it would not be too late to retract the terrible truth, to blot it from his mind with protestations of love, and win her back to faith in him. For she was still half-incredulous. Even now, it would not be too late to save his plans from destruction. And everything in him that was set upon revenge, cried out to him to do this. To take her into his arms, tell her it had all been a stupid joke; a test; anything so that he could kiss away the horror that moment had been to her. . . . But he didn't do it. Couldn't. Small Flower Deserves Title, Handful of Gold

Living in harmony with broad-leaved plantain, lady's tobacco, arrow-leaved blue violets and halber-leaved sorrel in old pastures and fields, the delicate little common cinquefoil or five-finger is a philosopher. Its five petals, five leaves, from which it gets its name, are emblematic of the five fingers of the human hand, and, held out in friendliness, it has something to give. The bright golden yellow flowers dot the short grass of the pastures like tiny golden coins thrown to the winds by spendthrifts. The plant believes in making its corner bright and cheerful. Once a lonely old witchwoman shunned by all, except when she went to care for the sick, asked Queen Mab of the Little People to offer a reward for acts of kindness. "Where anyone does an act of kindness," answered the fairy, "a handful of gold shall be found." The next morning the witch peered from her window to see a hungry dog in the yard. She threw him a bone. Where he snatched up the bone was found the yellow cinquefoil, five golden fingers—a handful of gold.—J. Ottis Swift, in the New York World-Telegram.

Pancake Bell

Many of the ancient customs and curious superstitions of England are recalled in a book recently from the press. One of them is the Pancake Bell. In old days this was rung on Shrove Tuesday to call the people to church to confess their sins. It is still rung on Shrove Tuesday at Olney, in Buckinghamshire. At the first chiming of the bell the makers of pancakes mix their materials. Then, after sufficient time for cooking the dainties has been allowed, a big bell tolls as a signal to eat them. Immediately girls rush to the church with frying pans in their hands and the pancakes merrily sizzling within. The reason for the race is to have the honor of being the first to serve pancakes to the ringers.

Spider's Presence a Blessing

Spiders are not produced from dirt or by hot climates. All species are carnivorous, eating insects and other spiders, and they are likely to be found wherever their insect prey may be caught. When they enter a home or building, they do so for the purpose of cleaning out flies and other insects.

What he was doing was only justice! he was doing as he had been done by. That was all. By Heaven! He wouldn't let this new weakness conquer him. He strode suddenly toward the stairs, went up them two at a time, pushed open the door of Lucy's room, closed it again and stood confronting her. . . .

She was standing by the dressing table looking down with dreamy eyes at the neat array of ivory things he had given her, and turned, at hearing him come into the room, startled, but with the gossamer trail of the dreams still upon her.

"Jim," she cried softly.

"You're afraid of me, aren't you?" he said, abruptly, not moving from the door.

She colored hotly, but answered at once:

"No. Why, Jim, how could I be. . . . When you've been so. . . . When I love you so. . . . And know that you love me. . . . I couldn't be afraid of you, dear. . . . Only. . . . a wedding day is such a great, big. . . . wonderful day. . . ." She caught a breath. "Love is such a great, big, wonderful thing. . . . And I've been. . . . until now. . . . Ah, Jim, can't you realize and understand?"

"Rather a little girl. . . ." He echoed the words, as if they had been wrung from him, and she saw that his hands were clenched so tight that he was shaking from head to foot. She went close to him then and looked up into his face, sweet-eyed, lips trembling; put up her arms and drew down his head, so that his cheek lay against hers, and whispered:

"Jim. . . . we made vows in church today. . . . But, darling, they were just words. . . . My real vows were made so. . . . deep in my heart. . . . that there never could be words to find them. . . . I'll truly try to be. . . . everything you think me. . . . Everything you want me to be. . . ."

That was beyond endurance. The desecration of this young, untouched girl, tricked into marrying a man who did not love her. . . . Giving herself to him with such perfect love and trust. . . . He had meant to go through with this marriage; had meant to keep back the moment of revelation until his plans were ready for it. . . . But in that moment he knew that he couldn't. . . . He didn't care, then, what happened, if only he could shut out the sight of those trusting eyes; those fragrant, girlish lips. . . .

He caught her wrists and pushed her suddenly from him. She fell back, looking up, now, with startled eyes.

"Jim. . . ." she said. . . . "What is it? What's happened. . . . Jim, what have I done. . . .?"

"You haven't done anything. . . . It's myself. . . . myself. . . . Don't look at me like that, Lucy. . . . His voice was hard and broken.

"Jim." The name came in a whisper. . . . "Don't you. . . . don't you love me any more. . . .?"

There was a moment of deathly silence.

Then he said, the words coming as if his lips were not perfectly flexible: "I never have loved you. . . . I think I hate your whole breed. . . ."

CHAPTER IV

Lucy Learns the Truth

Even as he told her this he cursed himself for telling it. He hadn't meant to; he had meant to go slowly, working toward the completion of his revenge in his own way, until the moment was ripe for his triumph. His marriage with John Gresham's girl had been only the beginning of the vengeful schemes which seethed in his brain. He had laid his plans so carefully, he had taken his steps so cautiously, yet here he was, jeopardizing them, perhaps even wrecking them, at the very start. And why? Why? All because he was fool enough to be oddly moved by her. . . . Because he was fool enough to be stirred by her youth and littleness; her sweetness, because the closing of a door behind her had made him feel like an ogre who has trapped a trusting little fairy. . . .

All this and more, went through and through his mind as he stood looking, sullen-eyed, down at Lucy, while she, horrified, incredulous, stared up at him.

"Jim," she said, in a low voice. "This isn't true, is it? You. . . . you aren't really telling me this! I mean. . . . it's some sort of. . . . dream, isn't it?" The words quivered pitifully to silence.

"It is true," he said doggedly.

"That you don't love me?" She was still unable to believe.

"And I don't love you," he replied. "And I don't love you."

She looked at him a moment longer, then drew a deep breath and passed a shaking hand across her forehead.

"You are telling me this seriously? Seriously, Jim?" she said in a tremendous whisper.

Even now, he believed, it would not be too late to retract the terrible truth, to blot it from his mind with protestations of love, and win her back to faith in him. For she was still half-incredulous. Even now, it would not be too late to save his plans from destruction. And everything in him that was set upon revenge, cried out to him to do this. To take her into his arms, tell her it had all been a stupid joke; a test; anything so that he could kiss away the horror that moment had been to her. . . . But he didn't do it. Couldn't. Instead he answered:

"Seriously, you'd better believe it."

Lesson for May 1

ISAAC AND HIS WELLS

LESSON TEXT—Genesis 26:12-25. GOLDEN TEXT—A soft answer turneth away wrath; but grievous words stir up anger. PRIMARY TOPIC—Isaac Follows His Father's Example. JUNIOR TOPIC—Isaac Follows His Father's Example. INTERMEDIATE AND SENIOR TOPIC—How to Keep Quiet. YOUNG PEOPLE AND ADULT TOPIC—How World Peace is to Be Established.

Isaac was a child of the covenant and was given in the time of the old age of Abraham and Sarah, in fulfillment of God's promise. His name means "laughter." As to character, he was gentle, meek, meditative and peace-loving. He was a remarkable contrast to his father Abraham. Two things may have affected him to his disadvantage:

1. The shadow of an illustrious father. Sons of great and rich men commonly do not make much of life. The necessity of struggle is not forced upon them.

2. He was brought up as the only child of his mother. The tendency in such a case would be to shield him from the necessity of self-effort, so that he would be unable to meet life's stern realities. Every child should be compelled to think for himself and to fight his own battles.

1. Isaac in Qerar (vv. 12-17). The appearance of the Lord unto him (vv. 1-3). Because of famine in the land Isaac went into the country of the Philistines. The distress upon the land should have moved him to call upon the Lord (James 5:13). It were better to suffer in the land than to go among the enemies of God's people. The Lord graciously appeared to him there and directed him not to go into Egypt, thus avoiding the error of his father. He was permitted to sojourn in this land because it ultimately was to belong to his seed.

2. His lapse (vv. 7-11). He yielded to the same temptation as did Abraham many years before (Gen. 20:12-13). This proves that it is not a good thing to dwell among the enemies of God's people. It was when Peter warmed himself at the fire of the enemy that he was tempted to deny his Lord.

3. His prosperity (vv. 12-17). Isaac did not intend to make Qerar his permanent place of abode. He intended only to sojourn there. While there he sowed and reaped bountifully. This prosperity was no proof that God approved of his course. God sends his rain upon the just and the unjust.

4. Isaac's enemies (vv. 18-22). He was not permitted to go to enjoy the fruitful land. His prosperity incited the envy of the Philistines. They could not stand to see his increase in flocks, herds, and servants. Success in any calling of life will provoke envy. They demanded that Isaac should leave them. Wherever envy has begun its deadly work, there must be separation. The Philistines took as their method of getting rid of Isaac the stopping up of the wells. Isaac did not contend for them but peacefully withdrew to another place where he proceeded again to dig the wells of his father. He called them by the same names as his father had given them.

1. Esek, which means "strife" or "contention." Instead of struggling with them, he removed from them and digged another well.

2. Sitnah, which means "enmity." The Philistines strove for this well also. The name given shows that there was increased bitterness of feeling.

3. Rehoboth. Because of the bitter opposition, Isaac removed from them and digged another well which he called "Rehoboth," meaning "there is room." The third time he digged there was no strife. The way to have peace is to wear out our enemies with patience.

4. Isaac in Beer-sheba (vv. 23-25). Immediately following Isaac's going up from among the Philistines, the Lord appeared to him. Our fellowship and privileges as sons and daughters of God are dependent upon our separation from the world (II Cor. 6:14-18). Following this visitation, Isaac built an altar and called upon the name of the Lord. As soon as a meeting place with Jehovah was established, Isaac pitched his tent there. Following this Isaac's servants digged a well. There is no use of going among the Philistines to get water. After Isaac was established in Beer-sheba, Abimelech came desiring to make an alliance with him. This shows that he gained influence by peacefully withdrawing from the Philistines. His behavior proved to them that he was the friend of God.

DAIRY

PROFIT SHOWN IN "SELLING" TO COWS

Good Method of Disposal of Surplus Forage.

Fourteen dollars worth of farm-grown feed fed to good average cows will produce $28 worth of butterfat at present prices and will leave $5.00 worth of skim milk on the farm, to say nothing of manure.

At the present prices for butterfat, the man who has produced a surplus of forage and other dairy food can sell this feed through cows for a fairly good return for his labor," says A. C. Kimrey dairy extension specialist at North Carolina State college.

"The relation between the farm price of dairy feeds and butterfat is favorable now and bids fair to remain so. Records kept on present market conditions show that if $14 worth of feed is fed to good average cows, it will produce 100 pounds of butterfat. When sold for buttermaking purposes, this fat is worth $28. In addition, there will be left on the farm about 1,000 pounds of skim milk worth 35 cents a hundred pounds. This is excellent for feeding the poultry or hogs and when so fed has a value of $5.00."

In addition to these values, 75 per cent of the plant food in the feedstuffs go back to the farm in the form of manure, and thus cut down the fertilizer bill, says Mr. Kimrey.

The return from selling feedstuffs through cows does not suggest that anyone will get rich from the project, cautions Mr. Kimrey, but he does suggest that a better price will be received for the grains and hay than if the same material is sold in the raw state. In addition, there is the advantage of a steady income each month from the sale of cream.

Wheat Has Proved Value
in Dairy Cow's Ration

The boost in wheat prices may result in corn proving a more economical grain in the dairy ration than wheat, on some farms, according to C. L. Blackman, specialist in dairying in the department of animal husbandry at the Ohio State university.

If the price of wheat should go much higher than that of corn, he asserts, it will be good business to sell wheat and buy corn and save the balance. This, he believes, is a good time to watch prices of all kinds and vary the rations according to the largest possible returns per dollar's worth of feed.

It has been found that when wheat displaces 300 pounds of corn and makes up 80 per cent of the dairy ration, about the same results are obtained from the wheat as are obtained

THE SCOUT AND HIS LIFE WORK

"Misfits" are among life's most common tragedies. They represent wastage of the highest creation of the infinite—waste of human time and energy and possibility.

The statement has been made that a careful attention on the part of someone could easily prevent three-fourths of the round pegs in square holes.

The annual loss to society amounts to billions but greater still is the loss to the individual—the undermining of his confidence and hope and courage which robs him of his power.

Every boy is by birth entitled to assistance in the definite planning of his life course.

"Looking ahead" and consciously preparing for a deliberately chosen service has after a long time come to be an orthodox thing educationally.

Hitherto there have thronged through the schools hurrying millions to whom little or nothing was ever said about what service they would actually render society.

Thousands have passed through High School and four years at College—at least sixteen years of relative leisure while others bore the burden of the world's work that these might have time for contact with the thoughts and experiences of the ages and through it all, very, very often no one has ever raised the question of Whither? Of what it was all for? Of what service it might enable him to return to the common good.

The Scout movement through its merit badge system is able to help these boys to choose their life work. After becoming a second class Scout he may take as many of the courses as he chooses. In this way he is led to the thing that he is most interested in.

We are still interested in books. If you have any that are old or new we would like to have them. Any that are in bad shape we will fix with new backs. Either let Mark Williams or Joe Woodcox know about them and we will call for them. We want either reference or fiction books.

If you want to buy, sell or exchange anything, just try an ad in our classified column.

Readers having court work to do for which newspaper legal advertising is necessary, will confer a favor on the St. Joe News by asking that the legal notices be inserted in this paper. You will be helping the home paper and meeting the law's requirements just as well as having the legal advertising done some place else, and then we can reach the people that will be most interested.

Prominent St. Joe Man Taken Suddenly

Succumbs to Heart Attack Last Friday While at Waterloo.
Shock to Entire Community-Funeral Monday.

Wm. Curie died Friday afternoon of heart failure while driving his car in Waterloo. His grandson, Robert was with him in the car at the time of his attack. He had just driven away from the Charles Grimm residence when he was fatally seized. His death was instant.

Mr. Curie, a life long resident of St. Joe was actively engaged in business for 50 years. During the course of his life he was engaged in the Farm Implement, Hardware and Livestock business. At one time he was reputed to have had the largest farm implement business in this part of the state.

Mr. Curie enjoyed to an unusual degree the confidence of hundreds of friends and business associates and his reputation for integrity, honesty and sincerity was well known.

He was president and also vice president of the St. Joe Valley Bank for several years. He was also treasurer and trustee of the K. of P. Cemetery Association and also was a former president of the DeKalb County Bankers Association. About 20 years ago he was County Chairman of the Democratic Party and always took an active part in politics. He was president of the Town Board for about 16 years and was chairman of the St. Joe Memorial Association for about 8 years. Mr. Curie was always active in civic affairs and took a leading part in the progress of the community. He was a member of the Masonic, K. of P. and I. O. O. F. lodges.

The funeral services were held Monday at 2:00 P. M. at the family home, M. P. Church and Riverside Cemetery, under the auspices of the Masonic lodge. Rev. J. N. Scholes delivered the sermon with Rev. V. Odell Harrold assisting.

WILLIAM CURIE

OBITUARY

Wm. Curie, first son of Christian and Catharine Curie, was born in Canton, Ohio, November 20, 1863 and died April 29, 1932, age 68 years, 5 months and 9 days.

His death caused by heart failure was instant and was a great shock to people in this part of the state.

There is no wish to emphasize, unduly the talent and character of Mr. Curie, but it is a simple fact that he possessed an easy facility for business and a remarkable attitude in making friends and holding that friendship. He was generous to which many people can attest. His prominence in business affairs and as a leader in civic progress was acknowledged. His advice and counsel was widely sought.

He is survived by his widow and two sons, Elgin and Paul Curie of St. Joe; three brothers, Frank, Morris and Grover of St. Joe; six sisters, Mrs. Arline Koch of St. Joe, Mrs. Maude Beams of Spencer, Mrs. Amanda Klopfeinstein of Grabbill, Mrs. Laura Whaley of Topeka, Kan., Mrs. Emma Skilling of Baltimore, Md., and Mrs. Anna Henderson of Grant, Mich., and also by two sons.

The active Pall Bearers were J. C. Hull, Robert Nicholls, Christian Sailer, F. R. Bowman, W. G. Erick and C. R. Price.

The Honorary Pall Bearers were Judge Endicott, H. C. Springer, Richard Sharpless, F. A. Jenkins, Ray Reasoner and O. K. Shull.

Eight of his nieces carried the floral tributes, Thelma Curie, Marcelene Curie, Enid Curie, Doris Beams, Lucille Curie, Grace Curie, Mary Curie and Ruth Curie.

Mrs. F. B. Leighty, C. A. Woodcox, Joe Woodcox, Roy Koch and Merritt Sechler had charge of the musical service.

Rev. J. N. Scholes and Rev. V. Odell Harrold, pastors. E. R. Kinsey, funeral director.

APPRECIATION

We wish to thank the fraternal orders, the friends, neighbors and many others who were so kind to us during our bereavement.

Mrs. Wm. Curie

K. OF P. RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

Whereas it has pleased the Almighty God to remove from our midst and call to his eternal reward, Brother Wm. Curie, Therefore, Be it resolved, That in the death of Brother Curie, the K. of P. Lodge, No. 400, has lost a valued member, this community a good citizen and the wife a devoted husband.

Therefore, Be it Resolved, that we be urged to a more faithful discharge of our duties in exemplification of his virtues.

Be it Further Resolved, as a mark of respect and esteem to our deceased brother, that our charter be draped for a period of thirty days, that these resolutions be spread on record in the minutes of our Lodge, that a copy be sent to the St. Joe News for publication and a copy sent to the bereaved family, to whom we extend our heartfelt sympathy.

Committee:

Geo. Walter.
Laney Gee,
Chas. Bassett.

DAYLIGHT SAVING TIME ADOPTED BY BOARD

Beginning next Saturday night at midnight, all citizens are asked to turn their time pieces ahead one hour, so as to be in harmony with all surrounding towns, such was the unanimous decision of the town board at their Monday evening session.

It has been the custom of following this rule each year until last year, the matter did not pass the council, but many adopted the fast time in order to be in harmony.

It has proven a great disturbance to have conflicting times in a community, so in order to do away with this, the board asks that each person willingly fall into line and then go on and work from daylight until dark.

The savings time will be discontinued on Saturday night, September 3rd, as is the case in other towns of our community and state.

Alley Problem Settled

A number of matters were discussed in length at the Monday night session, and one of importance was that the board agree to furnish gravel for the repair of its alleys, where the property owner does the hauling of same, and first should take the matter up with the officials of our town, in order that there be no disputes to follow. This provision is made so that our people will take more pride about their premises.

Marshal Perry was also ordered to see that a number of alleys were cleaned of rubbish and ashes, again calling upon our citizens to renew their pride in keeping things clean and wholesome.

Tenders Resignation

E. B. Smith, councilman from Ward 8, tendered his resignation, as he leaves this week to take new work near Gary at Crocker.

The board, during the term of the appointment of Mr. Smith has been quite harmonious and many things have been done for the best interests of the town.

Mr. and Mrs. Gray Woodcox and children, of Garrett came Saturday and spent the day in the C. A. Woodcox home. Mr. and Mrs. Byron Woodcox and baby of Fort Wayne were Sunday guests.

CO-AID CLASS ENTERTAIN MOTHERS

The Co-Aid class of the M. P. Sunday School entertained their Mothers at the home of Inez Kinsey, Monday evening.

A short impromptu program was furnished by Rev. Harrold, Marvel Stydle, the class teacher, Mrs. Lora Leighty and Violet May.

A two-course lunch was then served after which a general social hour was enjoyed by all.

The guests of honor were Mrs. David Roth of Grabbill, Mrs. Loretta Hull, Mrs. Alice Gee, Mrs. Margaret May, Mrs. Mayola Kinsey, Mrs. Hattie Widney, Mrs. Aletha Kinsey, Mrs. Troas Carpenter, Mrs. Lena Stydle, Mrs. Lily Bishop and Mrs. Ruth Davis.

ONE MAN TAKEN FROM WABASH AT SPENCERVILLE

For years, three men have been employed at the Wabash depot at Spencer, and now E. B. Smith has been let out on third track and changed to near Gary. The agent will be on from 8 to 4, with St. Joe station to look after and the operator on second track from 6 to 2.

"BUDDY BOYS" COMING FRIDAY, MAY 6

An added attraction to the specialties for Friday night at the Benefit Play, will be the "Buddy Boys" acrobatic and tumbling quartet. This attraction has been secured and donated free to the Ladies Home Bureau through the courtesy of Kris & Schenher Haberdashers of Auburn.

FISH AND GAME CLUB WANTS TO MEET

Willard Hurni, has made a call for the members of the Fish and Game Club to meet at the town hall Thursday evening, at 7:00, to consider some special matters. All boys whether members of the club or not are asked to come.

FUNERAL ANNOUNCEMENT

Mrs. Matilda Cowan, age 89, died Tuesday morning at 6 o'clock at the home of Mrs. Verna King, Sturgis, Mich. Funeral will be held at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Staman, Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock, C. S. T. Burial in Riverside Cemetery.

Mrs. Iona Woodcox was on the sick list the first of the week.

Dr. and Mrs. C. R. Price were in Warsaw Sunday morning, where they visited Mrs. Price's nephew, Carl Dill, who is confined by sickness in the McDonald Hospital.

State Road Number 1, passing through St. Joe, is now officially marked, being done this week. Number 8, from Ohio State Line to Auburn is being graded and repaired.

THE GOOD TURN

"The final and chief test of the Scout is the doing of a good turn to somebody every day, quietly and without boasting. This is the proof of the Scout. . . . A boy may wear all the Scout uniforms ever made, all the Scout badges ever manufactured. . . . and yet never be a real Boy Scout. To be a real Boy Scout means the doing of a good turn every day."

The daily good turn is the essence of Scouting. It may be the smallest and most ordinary act conceivable—picking up a banana peel, putting ashes on an icy street, or showing a stranger his way. It may save life or relieve suffering. It may consist in public service. The deed must be something extra and must be consciously performed or the good turn loses its educative habit-forming value. Some few Scoutmasters argue that everybody, by force of circumstances, does at least one kindness a day. Hence—"Let's not waste time harping on the good turn, but let's go ahead with the tests." Result—a badge covered troop without a single real Boy Scout among its members.

The educative value to the individual of the good turn is directly proportional to the element of personal sacrifice involved. The Scoutmaster will be able to make his troop members see that the trivial acts of courtesy are "all in the day's work," and that only those services which involve a personal expenditure of time, effort, interest or devotion will bring compensation in deepened understanding of and devotion to the cause served.

The reserved badge and the knot in the necktie, as suggested in the Boy Scout Diary, are useful memory-jogs. Most successful Scoutmasters include a brief reminder of the good turn in every meeting. The Scout should not be encouraged to make good turn reports publicly, less such a practice lead to vain glory or conceit. Probably the most effective means of encouraging the daily good turn spirit in the individual Scout is the periodic troop good turn.

The principle of community service has become one of the outstanding features of the program of the Boy Scouts of America. During the war especially many opportunities for service came to the Scouts and they were met with unvarying enthusiasm and success.

The new Scout troop of St. Joe is putting out a troop garden. We have been able to get five acres of land and we are putting it out to help those people of our community that are not able to help themselves. We are asking your support. We need the following things to carry out our project. If you are able to give us any of these let Mark Williams or Joe Woodcox know. They are: Beans (either Lima or soup beans), Potatoes (any kind of late potatoes), We also need cans (either glass or tin in any size,) or money. If you can help us to any one of these items we will greatly appreciate it.

Miss Violet May left Tuesday for Muncie where she will be in school for the next six weeks.

W. E. Baxter and wife moved to Butler last week from their farm recently purchased of C. S. Hart and wife.

A small fire started in the F. L. Beams building at Spencer, on Monday afternoon. It was outed by the time the department arrived from St. Joe.

LIGHTS OF NEW YORK

If you have a desire to study life, walk along the fashionable beaches. There you will find all forms of it. The loveliest forms of life naturally belong to youth, children of the sun, active, slender and brown. It sometimes is almost startling to see light blue eyes looking out of deeply tanned faces surrounded by yellow hair. But youth is by no means all you find on the beaches. Look in front of the cabanas. There you will see those of more mature age preparing for their place in the beach solar system. Some of the males are especially noticeable. As a protection from the burning rays, they carefully are anointing bulging bodies with cocoa butter. They look a little like over-ripe tomatoes, with oil dressing.

But we are a bit more charitable toward plump figures than we were in days gone by. Not long ago we met Dr. Edward Farrell, the dental surgeon who plays big league baseball in the off-season when the patients aren't biting, and he said to us, "I see your chest is slipping," a remark which must have been intended as humorous exaggeration. We may no longer have the greyhound figure which distinguished our youth, but we certainly carry none of the excess poundage found on certain of our friends and acquaintances. We figure no man as plump who counts less than three chins.

We have, on various occasions, gone so far as to discuss the matter of diet. No man or woman in the world is difficult to talk to if you start one of three or four subjects. Just mention operations in general, sinus trouble or diet, and both strong, silent persons and bashful, inarticulate persons become as babbling brooks. The question of diet loosens the tongue beyond the power of strong drink. Everyone either has tried or thought of trying some diet and is anxious to discuss it. Moreover, everyone is fanatical in his desire to convert you to the particular diet he happens to favor. Diet, after all, is a simple matter. All you have to do is to stop eating everything you like.

To be sure, there are some who favor the exercise method. This is as bad, or worse. Prof. Artie McGovern, for instance, likes to get some dignified citizen extended on a hardwood floor and then induce him to take long imaginary rides on a phantom bicycle. Prof. William Muldoon used to get unsuspecting clients, miles from food and shelter, on horseback and then remove the horse. Prof. William Brown has many of the same ideas. Even Gene Tunney is likely to coax some absent-minded friend far up or down a deserted wood road, miles from a taxicab and a telephone.

Recently we met Daniel Howley, who spends his summers managing the Cincinnati baseball club. After one look, we said to him: "We don't see so much of you any more. What have you been doing? Dieting?"

"That diet stuff is the bunk," responded Mr. Howley, whose equator has shrunk from the circumference of a barrel to that of an orange. "All you have to do is to toss a medicine ball to somebody about 247 times each morning and then take a little ten-mile stroll in the afternoon. You can eat all you want, except perhaps you'd better lay off sugar, white bread, gravy, potato, desserts, and stuff like that."

So that's all you have to do. We gazed admiringly at Mr. Howley. He certainly looked like the tallest and slimmest of movie heroes. But it might not be becoming to us to be that slender. We have not Mr. Howley's height.

No, when you haven't the height to carry it, you don't want to be too thin. A tall tapering mast is all right, but saw it off, and it does not look half so imposing as a smokestack. Besides, we are not really plump—just healthy looking.

Air Force Figures

Worry to Britain

London.—British aeronautical authorities are much concerned over Great Britain's increasingly inferior position of its air corps, as revealed by armament statistics, which most of the nations have submitted to the League of Nations for consideration. A study of these statistics shows that Great Britain is now fifth in numerical air strength and is rapidly being overhauled, even by Jugo-Slavia.

Statistics submitted to the league by the various nations show their relative strength in first line aircraft and their total strength with all reserves as follows:

	First line aircraft	Total with all reserves
France	1,887	3,000
Great Britain	706	1,434
Italy	1,507	1,507
Poland	687	700
Czechoslovakia	846	847
Spain	462	649
Jugo-Slavia	627	924
Rumania	529	729
U. S. of America	1,725	2,351
Japan	1,334	1,929

It is believed, however, that Great Britain's numerical inferiority is considerably offset by the exceptionally high standard of her air force personnel and the superiority of her types of pursuit planes to those of most of the other nations.

TO "DRIVE A COACH-AND-SIX THROUGH"

COACHES-AND-SIX are out of style. Nobody uses them any more, except, of course, metaphorically and in the sense in which this line was first penned by Daniel O'Connell, orator from the Emerald Isle.

The significance with which this famous Irish speaker used these words was that there was not a statute, rule, law or regulation that he could not in some way legally evade, his exact language being "I can drive a coach-and-six through any act of parliament."

This was a direct allusion to the slipshod manner then prevalent in drafting bills in the house of parliament.

O'Connell's boast became a classic in the English language as a reference to any similar situation, although, as we have said, coaches-and-six are no longer in style.

The KITCHEN CABINET

GOOD THINGS FOR THE TABLE

A Dainty dessert and one easy to prepare is always popular with all housewives. Here is one:

Marshmallow Dessert.—Cut into small bits a cupful or more of marshmallows, add a handful of blanched and shredded almonds, cover with a cupful of whipped cream and at serving time serve in sherbet glasses topped with shredded pineapple.

Graham Cracker Date Tort.—Roll twenty-four graham crackers until fine with a rolling pin. Pour over the crumbs four large tablespoonfuls of butter melted. Prepare the following custard: Mix one cupful of sugar with one-half cupful of cornstarch, blend well, add a little salt and one quart of rich milk, cook until thick. Beat four egg yolks until light, add a little of the milk mixture and pour into the saucepan; cook until the custard is thick and smooth. Beat the egg whites until stiff, fold in gradually one-fourth of a cupful of sugar. Cut up one package of dates into fine bits. Now prepare a layer of the buttered crumbs in a good-sized dripping pan, pour over the custard, then on the custard sprinkle the chopped dates; cover this with the meringue and over that another layer of the buttered cracker crumbs. Bake twenty minutes in a moderate oven. Serve cut into squares, top with whipped cream and a maraschino cherry. Use a pancake turner to serve the squares as they are very easily broken.

Fruit Salad.—Prepare a bed of shredded lettuce. Place a slice of canned pineapple upon it. Fill one-half of a canned pear with diced bananas and celery mixed with mayonnaise dressing. Lay on top of the pineapple. Garnish with strips of green pepper. Serve with french dressing.

A potato salad is one of the easiest salads to make and one which is often the poorest. Potatoes are tasteless when cold and should always be marinated with a french dressing for two or three hours before the mayonnaise is added.

The national average is one failure for each five or six marriages.

Fred Wilde, sixty-eight, a farmer near Chewich, is pictured above pointing to the gravestone. His mother was a grandchild of Mrs. Hickey, who died in 1810. Mrs. Hickey was a great aunt to Ella and Rebecca Wendel, according to scores of Mrs. Hickey's descendants.

Ancestral Estate Bait Is Still Lure to Yanks

Mythical Fortunes in England Tempt Suckers.

London.—The biggest piece of international bait ever dangled before suckers at home or abroad still finds poor fish who swallow the hook, the line, and the sinker. It's that old moneys—the ancestral estate in England.

Waits go up periodically as demands, appeals, threats, and claims come by letter from the United States to officials in London, putting forward arguments based on the front page of the family Bible and the wheelings of slick confidence men. Thousands of Jennings, Blakes, Hydies, and Drakes, not only in the United States but in Canada, Australia, South Africa, and points both east and west believe they have a right to a castle, horses, dogs, vast acres, and piles of money in the bank, but the clever "estate lawyers" who dupe the ignorant into buying shares in such ventures have found most of their victims in America.

Another warning has just been issued by the American consulate general here. It is a typed, single spaced document seven pages long explaining why attempts to recover such estates are mistakes.

"Large unclaimed estates believed by many to exist in England are in practically every instance entirely mythical," says the consular general's memorandum, which is headed "A Warning." "and reports of vast sums 'awaiting claimants in the bank of England' or dormant in the courts of chancery are altogether without foundation."

"The collection of money which, it is claimed, is for the purpose of taking legal proceedings to secure for heirs alleged estates of fabulous value in Great Britain has become almost as established a business as that of selling spurious securities to the uninformed. The consulate general in London receives a number of letters each week, sometimes five or six in one day, with regard to nonexistent estates or estates that have been settled for so many years that no British court will reconsider decisions made, in some cases, more than a century ago."

The statement points out that promoters of these fake schemes for reclaiming supposed estates have sold many "units" for $100 each, and where prospective victims were unable to find that much cash, fractions of units. "Occasionally," it says, "a case is brought before the courts, but the costs are comparatively small and entirely out of proportion to the sums collected as advance fees."

A list enumerating "a few" of the alleged estates about which the consulate is frequently consulted and which actually do not exist was embodied in the statement. They are those of Sir Francis Drake, Hyde, Jennings (Jannigs or Jennens), Put-rick Rucker, Hedges, Mosher, Weber (Webber), Duke of Argyll, James Dixon, Helen Sheridan Blake, Lawrence-Jowley (Lawrence Townsen), Walmesley, Jacques, Gen. Richard Winn, Bonnet (Bonet), and Page and Green or Greene. The Jennings and the Blake estates are the favorites, and a week seldom passes without receipt of several letters from claimants to these "estates."

"It is a popular error that funds of unclaimed estates are left on deposit in the Bank of England," the memorandum observes. "This institution keeps a record of unclaimed government securities and dividends, and no other kind of unclaimed property."

In general, the consulate general statement advises all persons contemplating such action to consult expert legal opinion first. And it warns that even if unimpeachable evidence of genealogical claims is furnished, the probability is that the estate will prove too small to pay for the suit, even in the event of success.

Mrs. Clara Schaubberger, right, is now the mother of her "sister," Juanita, seven, having adopted back her little daughter who had been adopted by her grandmother, Mrs. Margaret Munn, left, when Mrs. Schaubberger, daughter of Mrs. Munn, divorced her husband.

King Carol's Escapades Are Cause of Army Discontent

Marshal Rebuked as He Pens Hints of Dethronement.

Geneva.—King Carol's uneasy throne shows new symptoms of shakiness, not the least of which is a growing discontent in the Rumanian army.

Reports percolating from Bukharest weeks ago hinted trouble ahead, but a "history parable" published in Bukharest by the fearless, blunt Marshal Averescu said in so many words that Rumania's army no longer gets its pay regularly and is "discontented."

Averescu even hinted at the dethronement of Carol, with the result that members of parliament felt it necessary to rebuke him and give three rousing cheers for the king.

Among diplomats here, however, the marshal's "history parable" was of particular interest because it seemed to confirm reports via Paris that political intrigue in Bukharest had developed to the point where Prince Nicholas felt duty bound to warn party leaders to "act quickly" if they wanted to save the dynasty.

Nicholas was quoted as saying that Mme. Magda Lupescu and other intimates of the king "control all his actions, and unless halted will surely drive both him and the dynasty to ruin." He is expected to return to Bukharest within a few days.

Besides the flaming-haired Lupescu the chief intriguers included, according to this report, Dumitrescu, the king's private secretary, and a Mme. Wieder, intimate friend of Lupescu. Queen Helene, Carol's divorced wife, visited him and her son, Prince Michael, and a reconciliation was hinted.

Now Marshal Averescu's parable says not a word directly about King Carol. It is merely a series of extracts from historical volumes, all bearing on the end fate of Prince Alexander Cusa, first ruler of Rumania, who lost his throne in a popular revolution in February, 1859.

"It was just 60 years ago today," writes the marshal, "that Alexandru Ioan Cusa lost the throne of the Rumanian princes."

The veteran then goes on to cite excerpts from this and that historian—excerpts with pat overtones of modern applicability. For instance:

"He failed to restore the country's economic equilibrium. Such measures as he attempted turned out to be directed against certain classes and groups. In addition there were various scandalous affairs, all-too-numerous in his disordered way of life."

The new preparation will not require any digging up of old roadways, but simply a recasting of them with nonskid surfacing. In some cases the top asphalt will be removed and concrete substituted, specially grooved and prepared to retard the progress of vehicles in rainy weather.

Paris Grooves Streets to Halt Auto Skidding

Paris.—When Paris is fully equipped with its new concrete streets and roadways, covered with odd little grooves and artistic patterns, there will be no skidding.

The new preparation will not require any digging up of old roadways, but simply a recasting of them with nonskid surfacing. In some cases the top asphalt will be removed and concrete substituted, specially grooved and prepared to retard the progress of vehicles in rainy weather.

Norwegians Score as Most Generous Tipsters

London.—Scandinavians are the world's most generous tipsters, hotel servants say.

A poll among waiters, bellhops, chambermaids and other employees of London's leading hostels showed Norwegians to be the most welcome guests. Other northern European visitors tipped almost as well.

Spaniards were a good second and Germans not far behind. The French and Italians, however, are considered "tight."

Americans, it was found, could not be classified. They tip extravagantly or hardly ever.

Inventor 'Cracks Up' Plane in Spite of Cops

Cannes.—French police for months have been trying to keep Albert Sauvent from cracking up his airplane—but he forced them and succeeded.

Sauvent, an inventor, had been prevented from testing his own "crash-proof" airplane. Police watched him closely. But he escaped their vigilance long enough to stage an intentional crack-up.

Sauvent, who emerged unhurt from the wreck, pronounced the crack-up "perfect."

DAIRY

FIGHT LOW PRICES BY CULLING COWS

Illinois Dairymen Get Rid of Low Producers.

Illinois dairymen are setting new speed records in getting rid of lower producing cows, as a means of meeting present prices, says C. S. Rhode, dairy extension specialist of the University of Illinois. Efficiency of production is being speeded up to what is expected to be a new high mark, he reported.

Members of the McHenry County No. 1 Dairy Herd Improvement association culled out 20 cows in one month. That same month more cows were culled from herds in the Livingston county association than had been culled in any one month during the past two years. Sixteen cows out of the LaSalle association herds have been sent to the butcher. One member in that county sold five of his lowest producing cows and thereby cut the feed cost of producing 100 pounds of milk 14 cents and the cost of producing butterfat three cents a pound.

Members of the Kane County No. 2 Dairy Herd Improvement association set the pace in reducing costs and lowering surpluses by culling 24 cows in one month. This was more than any other association reported.

Dairyman belonging to a dairy herd improvement association have an advantage over other herd owners when it comes to culling, for they know just what each cow is producing and can weed them out accordingly. Another thing, they feed and handle the cows that are left according to the latest recommended methods.

Be Sure Separator Is Working as It Should

The skim milk should be tested for butterfat at least once a month. This is the only way by which the skimming efficiency of the separator can be determined, as things can go wrong very quickly under certain conditions. Many separators apparently in good conditions are wasting enough butterfat to pay for a new separator every two years.

The separator should be kept well oiled, the oil cups attended to before each separating, and the oil in the splash basin changed at least every four months, as water and milk often get mixed with the oil and destroy much of its lubricating value as well as causing offensive smells. Any vibration or wobble in the spindle or bowl should be watched for and remedied at once, as this interferes with proper separation. Have the factory service man go over the machine at regular intervals to see that it is kept in first-class condition; as a few small repair parts and frequent inspection will often keep a separator doing first-class work for fifteen or twenty years.—American Agriculturist.

Successful Management

Dairy farmers, being manufacturers of essential food and other products, are interested in the same fundamental problems of production and distribution as are other manufacturers. The most successful dairy farmers strive to keep the cost of suitable raw materials (feed, crops) as low as possible. Being co-partners with nature in the manufacture of a large part of these raw materials, they recognize the importance of their own responsibility in producing large yields per acre of crops grown for feeding purposes.

Successful dairymen study the application of man, horse, and machine labor in order that they may get their work done efficiently. To safeguard capital investments is important in industry and this is true also in agriculture. The farmer who permits the dissipation of his capital investments soon is without a business.

Skim milk for Cows

Skim milk can be fed to dairy cows economically in the areas where it is a surplus product, state Iowa State college authorities. It can be used as a supplement instead of oilmeals when fed at the rate of eight pounds of milk displacing one pound of linseed or soybean oilmeal. The best way to feed it is to weigh the feed and the milk and pour the liquid over the grain. When the grain is fed on top of silage there will be no loss of milk.

With linseed oilmeal worth $2 a hundredweight, the skim milk is worth 21 cents a hundred pounds. With soybean oilmeal at $2.50 a hundredweight the skim milk is worth 23 cents a hundredweight for cows.

Skim milk is worth more for hogs and chickens but can be utilized for dairy cows.—Prairie Farmer.

Prolific Cow

The story of a cow which produced five heifer calves in ten months was told by G. B. Goodhart, Orangeville, Wis. The cow is a grade Guernsey, owned by Stanley Hertz, living one mile north of Orangeville. On February 4, 1931, she gave birth to twin heifer calves, and on December 1, produced triplets. All the calves are healthy. The cow, according to Mr. Goodhart, fills a 16-quart pail daily with milk which tests 5 per cent butterfat.—Missouri Farmer.

JOE PALOOKA

You've seen him in the comic strips. Now he's on the air! Joe Palooka—the world's worst dumb-bell—the world's best loved character!

Broadcast by Heinz Rice Flakes—"One of the 57 Varieties."

Joe Palooka, Boxing Champ.

Is Now Heard on the Air

Joe Palooka, that lovable boob of the prize ring and comic strip created by Ham Fisher, now comes to radio. Palooka, his fights and troubles and mixups, is being presented each Tuesday and Thursday at 8:45 p. m., EST, over the Columbia system.

The dumb, gentle but unbeatable boxing champ is portrayed by Ted Bergman, 200-pound Columbia actor who looks like a prize-fighter, in the fifteen-minute hilarious sketches adapted by Georgia Backus. His bold and wise-cracking manager, Knobby Walsh, is played by Frank Rendick, 130-pound Thespian. Ted Husing describes Joe's tremendous fight scenes and Harry von Zell announces the program.

MICROPHONICS

Charles Campbell, trombonist in Nat Shilkret's orchestra, was a member of George Olsen's band when that ensemble played over the first network in the history of broadcasting. It was in the days of carbon microphones and just before a program would give the mike a few hammer blows in order to insure good reception. The trombonist recalls that none of his fellow musicians took the possibilities of network broadcasting very seriously that day. Now, by a strange irony, he plays in "Music That Satisfies" which is heard over the largest sponsored network in radio history.

If a man can't argue, he'll quarrel.

To Men With Tender Skins

Wet your face with hot or cold water. Squeeze a small quantity of Cuticura Shaving Cream on to your moistened brush. Watch how quickly it works up into a fine, creamy lather. Then shave and know what it is to have your face free from that tight, dry after-feeling.

At your dealers or sent postpaid on receipt of 35c.

Address: Cuticura Laboratories, Malden, Mass.

MOST "WRITTEN UP" HOME IN AMERICA

Enormous Amount of White House Literature.

Legends and history of the White House are rapidly assuming such proportions that there can be little doubt it has become the "most written-up" building in America. The Washington bi-centenary observances this year have curiously served to stimulate a striking revival of interest in the White House, although Washington never lived in it—for the excellent reason that it was not finished in his time—and there is no historical foundation for the legend that he laid the cornerstone of it in 1792.

It has been noted by the officials of the Congressional library that any President's wife could find more reading matter about her official home of the shelves there than she could possibly read in four, or even eight years.

A summary of this official literature, just completed for the Woman's Home Companion, starts with the architectural contest for the plans for "the President's Palace," as it was at that time called. The contest was won by James Hoban, an Irishman from Charleston, S. C. The building was finished in time for the first Adams family to spend three months in it.

Then came President Jefferson and his daughters, followed by the reign of Dolly Madison, the sprightly Quakeress, climaxed by her escape from the house just before a British admiral burned it in the War of 1812. The legend of Mrs. Madison holding the fort till the last minute and then calmly leaving with her carriage full of state papers and the Presidential silver, and sending into safe-keeping the portrait of George Washington, turns out to be true, fully proved by official documents. She returned 48 hours later, to find the President's house, as she called it, a smoke-blackened ruin.

The present name of the house, it develops, goes back to those smoke-blackened walls. They were painted white to cover the stains of the smoke, when the building was rebuilt by Hoban, following closely the original plans.

Tut's Caricature Found

Some ancient-time sculptor conceived the idea that a bust of King Tut-Ankh-Amen at shaving time would create a laugh. It is doing so now, for an amusing caricature of the king, his beard bristling and soapy, has been discovered at his burial place at Tek-el-Amarna, according to a report from Cairo, Egypt. A painting outfit also found, may have been the king's own.

In the Movies

MANY people joke about it, but the fact is that the "cave-man" type is now the most popular on the screen. Women love a powerful personality... one with vigor, force, and determination.

These qualities reflect good health! Do not let yourself be forced into the background! Fellow's Syrup will help to build up your health and energy by restoring many valuable elements demanded by Nature. It improves the appetite. It induces sleep. It is a valuable tonic for men and women who feel nervous and "run down." For real "pep," ask your druggist for genuine

MANY LETTERS addressed to you personally

Think of the advertisements in this paper as so many letters addressed to you, personally. That's what they're intended to be, and, actually, that's what they are. This newspaper is, in effect, a mail-bag which brings you news of events and news of the best merchandise at the fairest prices.

You don't throw away letters unread. You don't read three or four letters carefully and skim through the rest. Treat the merchandise letters in this newspaper the same way. Read them all. Read them carefully. One single item will often repay you for the time it has taken to read them all.

Many good housekeepers have formed the habit of reading their newspaper with a pencil and paper, ready to jot down the articles they wish to look at when they start out on their shopping tour. Try this method. It saves time, and saves money, and provides you with the pick of the day's merchandise.

Every advertisement has a message all its own.

SPENCERVILLE HIGH SCHOOL NEWS

News Events of Interest to the Public
In General

of school—then begins our summer vacation.

Workmen have been cleaning the yard, mowing the grass, and cultivating the shrubbery. Nearly all of the shrubs show signs of having withstood the winter very well.

The dirt which was removed from the play room in the basement in preparation for cementing the floor has been scattered to low places about the school yard.

The junior high school baseball team lost to Hicksville at Hicksville on Friday afternoon.

The senior play was well given and well received. They had a full house, many having to stand. Much credit is due the cast and Miss Hollabaugh, who coached the play, for the success with which it went over.

National Better Homes Week was observed here by exhibits and a program at the school house on Thursday evening. A goodly number were present, and the talks given were interesting and instructive.

The baccalaureate services for Spencerville High School graduating class will be held at the M. E. Church on Sunday evening, May 15, 7:30 P. M. Rev. J. O. Rose of Angola will deliver the address.

Commencement will be held on Tuesday evening, May 17, at the Lutheran Church, members of class and the school furnishing the evening's program of addresses and music.

The secretive Juniors have been busy also on some well-guarded project. The Seniors like to imagine that the preparations may indicate something to which they may be invited. We'll see!

It is high time that all reading points were reported on and the books returned to the library, if credit is desired for reading done. The librarian will appreciate your thoughtfulness in returning books promptly, as the library must be in order by the close of the term.

Spencerville school expects to finish the term on central standard time; so don't be late, nor yet too early.

JOHN GRESHAM'S GIRL

By CONCORDIA MERREL

(Copyright.)—WATU Service.

THE STORY

By chance James Lee meets Lucy Gresham, daughter of Sir John Gresham, wealthy ship builder. Lee, unjustly accused of robbing the Gresham firm, was sent to prison. He blames Oliver Ames, Lucy's cousin, and Gresham's manager, and seeks revenge. Lee inherits wealth, and in compliance with the will, changes his name from Warrington. He secures an invitation to the girl's birthday party. Lucy is practically engaged to Ames. She meets Lee, who makes love to her, planning thereby to hurt Gresham and Ames. With Gresham's approval, Lucy and Lee are married. Lee stuns the girl by telling her he does not love her, and hates her "whole breed."

CHAPTER IV—Continued

"If your love for me has all been a lie . . . how am I to believe anything you say to me?" she cried. "Jim, you don't know what you are saying! You can't know. Jim, do you mean that when you have taken me in your arms, it has been a lie? When you have kissed me . . . it has been a lie, too? Jim, you can't mean that. . . . It was a cry right up from the depths of her hurt heart. A cry it would have been easy to answer. He had only to take her into his arms and tell the lie again. But still he couldn't. The personal equation was a stronger thing than he had ever known. . . . He shook himself free of her hands and moved away from her.

"I do mean it," he said. She went so terribly pale that he thought she was going to faint; but she didn't. She stood stone still, for a moment, then bowed her head and covered her face with her hands. The utter stillness of her was almost uncanny. It seemed to him that no living thing could ever have appeared so utterly lifeless. Then slowly she raised her face, all white and drawn, and looked up at him again.

"Then I suppose," she said tonelessly. "I suppose it is true. . . . I suppose I must believe. . . ."

The change in her was startling. Some light had gone out of her eyes; some lit from her voice. It was as if in that moment of stillness her youth had died. With a word he had killed the lovely youngness of her. It gave him a feeling of having driven his fist into the face of a child.

"But, Jim," she went on in the same toneless voice. "Why? Why, Jim? What has made you do this to me? What have I done that you should want to hurt me so?"

"You are your father's daughter," he answered slowly.

"Then what is it that he has done? Jim, you must tell me. You can't do a thing like this and leave me all in the dark. You can't say these nightmare things and leave them unexplained. . . . You must tell me. What has father done?"

"Do you remember telling me of the man who had robbed a pay clerk and been imprisoned . . . ?"

She drew a breath as if she knew what was coming, and nodded.

"Do you remember saying that he was horrible? And that he had to be hurt?"

"Yes."

"Well, I'm that man."

There was a silence. Her eyes never left his face, but they were quite unreadable. Whether she was shocked at this news or not, he couldn't tell. Perhaps after what had just gone, she was past the point of being shocked further. She was so unmoved that he said again:

"I am that man."

"Well," she said in that steady, measured voice that sounded so terribly wrong from her. "Well, you are that man, then; I believe you. After tonight, I don't think I shall ever find it difficult to believe anything. You are that man. I still don't understand. . . . I'm slow, I suppose. But why did you marry me, Jim?"

"To pay them back," The words fell very cold and clear.

"Father?" she questioned.

"And—Ames."

"Oh, yes. . . . I'm beginning to see. . . ."

"They let me go to prison," he said harshly. "For three years. . . ."

"For robbing a pay clerk?"

"Yes. . . . with violence. . . . Three years penal was my sentence. . . . There was another silence, then:

"Had you done it, Jim?" Her dead voice came up to him, hitting on his nerves. If only she'd change the tone, show some life. . . .

"You said that that man must have done it," he retorted hastily. "You said that Ames wouldn't have let him go to prison if it hadn't been absolutely proved that he had done it. . . ."

"Yes; I did say that. . . . I remember. . . ."

"You said," he went on, "that he must be hurt. . . . Well, he has been hurt. . . . Can you imagine what a purgatory prison is. . . . Can you picture what it meant to me, with my strength and ambitions, to be caught and held for three whole years? With life going by outside? Three years! Thirty-six whole months. . . . A hundred and sixty-six dragging weeks. . . . Over a thousand interminable days. . . . I hurt!" he laughed dully. "Don't worry about that, Lucy. . . . I've been hurt. . . . good and plenty. . . ."

"And so you hurt me?" she said. "No; them—your father and Ames—through you."

"You set yourself to make me love you, so that you could make Oliver suffer. . . . and father. . . ."

"He'll scarcely like to have a mill-bird for a son-in-law," he broke in bitterly.

"Oh, yes, I see. . . . It was a neat plan, and marvelously successfully carried through."

If she would only cry or break down in some way, he thought. This dead-level calm was ghastly to listen to.

"And I see why you were afraid of losing me. Always so queerly afraid of that, weren't you, Jim? I understand it now. You were afraid of losing this revenge of yours. Afraid something might happen to upset your scheme. And I thought you were afraid of losing me because you loved me; in the way that a lover is afraid, because he loves so much and can hardly believe that such happiness can last. I thought that was what made you afraid, Jim. . . . I thought I understood it, because sometimes I was almost afraid myself. . . ."

The dead voice went on, dining into his ears, beating on his nerves, till he almost gave way to a sheerly womanish desire to scream. But he could only say:

"Yes, it's all true. Everything you say."

He wanted to move his eyes from hers, but somehow could not. Those big, blue eyes of hers, void of feeling as that changed, terrible voice, just looked straight up into his, and held them.

"And your pride of conquest; your triumph; your glory in that great, big strength of yours, that could pick me victed of robbery with violence, perhaps you'd rather leave it till tomorrow? The bitterness of that was insupportable."

"Oh, I'm not in the least afraid," she answered. "I wasn't afraid of your love and I'm not afraid of your hate."

"Then you'd better go to bed. There's nothing profitable in this. He turned violently and flung himself toward the door of his dressing room."

"In that your room, Jim?" her voice came after him.

He turned in the doorway.

"Yes. But I'll go and sleep in one of the spare rooms if you object to my being so near you," he answered bluntly.

"Oh, no," she said tiredly. "It doesn't matter. Good night, Jim." The little formality, coming with such lifeless mechanicalness clutched at his heart in the most extraordinary way. A chaos of impulses arose within him, and died before he could get them sorted out. But that last sight he had of her, standing there looking after him, suddenly brought something she had said to his memory:

"Rather a little girl. . . ."

He found that he was saying the words to himself as he closed the door and shut out the sight of her.

Lucy sat on the edge of the big bed staring out helplessly before her, trying vainly to get a hold on life again. Reality seemed to have slipped from her grasp, and she felt that she was struggling in the throes of a nightmare. And yet she knew that the nightmare was only the truth. It had happened, that ghastly scene just now, with Jim. He had told her all those terrible things. She knew that they were true, and she knew that they had changed everything for her. Yesterday seemed centuries past. Her love, her engagement, her wedding—all seemed as if they had happened to some one else.

Jim was that man who had gone to prison for robbery with violence; a workman at Gresham's. She had heard her father speak of that man; Ames, too; but she had never heard of the affair in such detail.

What was she to do? Go back to her father, as Jim had suggested? She could be sure of sympathy and comfort there. . . . Yes, she supposed that was the only thing to do. Go back and tell the truth. Tell that it was for this man who could deal so treacherously with her, that she had given up her rose-strewn girlhood; for a man who could wound her in this terrible way, that she had refused Oliver's devoted love. . . . For a man who had suddenly become this terrible, this monstrous thing that Jim had shown himself to be. From being everything she had loved, he had become—this.

What did she feel for him now? An answering hatred? An answering vengeance? She searched her heart for the truth. It was none of these. She did not know quite what it was. Just a sort of numb horror was as near as she could get to it. Fear? No. There was no fear of him in her heart. She had told him that, and it had not been in any way a bluff. Just horror, that was all. Horror of finding that something she had loved and revered was really a thing to be hated, despised, abhorred.

Thoughts began then to go round in circles; repeating over and over again; dimly; unobscured. It was nearly dawn when she wearily addressed and got into bed; and full day before, exhausted with a sort of utter exhaustion she had never before known, she sank into sleep.

She did not see Lee again until noon next day. She had not been up long, but evidently he had, for he came into the house in riding kit. As he crossed the hall, he turned, and through the open doorway of the living room he saw her standing by a table, arranging pink roses in a big silver bowl. He stopped, startled by up and carry me off as easily as you had taken my love. . . . Oh, a big triumph, Jim! A big triumph. . . .

"And So You Hurt Me?" She Said.

"Well, it was the triumph I had been working for. . . . Three years' hell takes some paying back," he said sullenly.

"And I was so simple, wasn't I? So unbelievably easy. You just looked and—conquered, didn't you? Did you laugh sometimes to yourself, Jim, when you held me in your arms and. . . ."

"No," he said roughly. "I've never—laughed. Think what you like. . . . But that, at least, isn't true. . . ."

"Not that it matters much. And if you had, it would be understandable, for surely there was humor in it, somewhere. . . ."

She broke off, turned away, looking round the room as if she had been walking in her sleep and had just awakened to wonder, dazedly, where she was. Then her eyes came back to his.

"And now, Jim, we are married," she said, "and you have told me that you don't love me. Now, what are we to do?"

"I didn't mean to tell you," he cried.

"Then, why did you?" she asked wearily. "After setting your plans so carefully, why should you do anything you did not mean to do? That was not typical of you, was it?" It was not bitter said; neither was there the least hint of irony in it. It was as if she had suddenly seen him in a new and terrible light, and quite simply accepted that he was this new and terrible thing.

"No," he answered abruptly. "It isn't typical; but I did it. You'll not believe me capable of a . . . decent impulse toward you, after this it means. . . . I couldn't take all that it means. . . . letting you think that I. . . . Oh, hang it all, some idiotic weakness caught me. . . . and I told you!" That came roughly, and he flung away from her and strode over to the window, pulled back the curtains and stood breathing in the soft night air, as if the room had suddenly become suffocating. She turned slowly and looked after him.

"Well, Jim, what are we to do?" "I suppose you'll leave me, won't you?" he suggested. She paused, then:

"Tonight?"

"If you are not afraid to be in the house with a man who has been conquered of robbery with violence, perhaps you'd rather leave it till tomorrow? The bitterness of that was insupportable."

"Oh, I'm not in the least afraid," she answered. "I wasn't afraid of your love and I'm not afraid of your hate."
